Bolling Scion Slays Chum To Still Talk On Romance

Virginian Blames Affair With Married Woman, Police Assert.

Friend Stabbed, Slain With Rifle

State's Attorney Expects Defense to Enter Insanity Plea.

By Eugene Warner.
A Staff Correspondent.

Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 4.—Landon Bolling, handsome 6-foot scion of one of the oldest families in Virginia, was held in jail here tonight after confessing to one of the most brutal murders of recent Virginia history.

The young heir to an $80,000 estate was formally charged with stabbing, shooting and beating to death George Carter, a poor friend who lived with him in his apartment.

In his efforts to conceal his crime, Bolling is alleged to have attended a motion picture show last night. He made his daily life seem as normal as possible during the three days the murder was being investigated.

A married woman was named by Bolling as the cause of his act. He said he was afraid Carter would tell the woman's husband of an indiscretion committed three weeks ago.

Held incommunicado until late this afternoon after signing a confession in the early hours of this morning, the wealthy young man was permitted to see the family attorney, William K. Goolrick, tonight.

Goolrick reported his client's nerves were shattered and that it was "inadvisable" to prolong the interview more than a few minutes. No plans for a defense have been made.

Commonwealth Attorney W. B. F. Cole said he was anticipating an insanity plea.

Bolling's brother, Charles, at the present time is in an institution for the feeble minded.

Bolling is a member of an old Virginia family tracing back more than a century. He and his brother are descendants of the Hall family, planters, and respected throughout the State as genuine first families of Virginia.

Tells of Slaying.

Bolling's deceased mother was Sophia Hall, who inherited large estates and owned considerable property in the heart of Fredericksburg. The son converted most of this property into securities and lived on the income. He did not work. His father, before his death, owned a paint business here which the son also disposed of.

The father, Maurice Bolling, also deceased, was a member of the city council.

Commonwealth's Attorney Cole said that Bolling confessed he had killed Carter when Carter entered the bathroom of their two-room flat, which was in the rear of a large house owned by the Bollings. Bolling carefully shut the door of the bathroom so that occupants of the front section of the house could not hear the noise of a fight.

Bolling was dressed at the time, Carter in his underwear. Bolling told police he attacked Carter with a bowie knife and that Carter seized a 22-caliber rifle and attempted to shoot him.

In the scuffle, Bolling is alleged to have confessed to stabbing Carter in the left lung and then shooting him through the head over the right ear.

Next he told police he threw Carter into the tub on his back with great force. Cole reported that Carter's skull was badly fractured in six different places.

Carter was thrown into the tub with his feet hanging over the faucets, and was in that position when found by police.

Phoned to Doctor.

Following the killing, the Virginian, who is 29, placed the rifle in his dead chum's arms and telephoned a doctor. About 2:30 a. m. a doctor arrived.

Bolling explained to the physician and police that he had been asleep and had been awakened by a rifle shot. He alibied that he knew nothing of the "suicide" and had no explanation of why Carter should kill himself.

Bolling was subsequently questioned a dozen times by local officers and Detectives F. M. Dosquet and L. R. Kellam, who arrived from

One Killed, 2d Hurt As Truck Hits Tree

Perry J. Sain, 39, of 2010½ Fourteenth street northwest, was killed instantly late last night when a truck in which he was riding crashed into a tree at Fiftieth street and Sheriff road northeast.

Russell Lee Dyson, of Seat Pleasant, Md., driver of the truck, is dying at Casualty Hospital.

The death of Sain brought the District's 1936 traffic toll to 84. He was pronounced dead on arrival at the hospital.

Police did not immediately learn the cause of the accident, which left the upturned truck a tangled mass of wreckage.

Roosevelt Wins 'Peace Apostle' Title at Parley

Work to Unite 2 Americas Hailed as Delegates Begin Conferences.

By the Associated Press.

Buenos Aires, Dec. 4.—Committees of the Inter-American Peace Conference went to work tonight after the first full business session heard President Roosevelt hailed as "apostle of peace."

Secretary of State Cordell Hull, head of the United States delegation, took no committee post himself in naming members of his group to various assignments, indicating he will maintain a general supervisory position and hold consultations when necessary.

Before it broke into committees the conference received a peace petition signed by more than 1,000,000 women, which was brought to Buenos Aires by ten American women who flew here.

Argentine Foreign Minister Carlos Saavedra Lamas, chosen permanent chairman of the conference, said of President Roosevelt in welcoming the delegates:

"The initiator of this conference and an apostle of peace, we owe to his prestige and his sponsorship the moral atmosphere which he has left us and which constitutes an augury of the success of our deliberations."

The President's visit, he said, "was not only opportune, but providential."

(Mr. Roosevelt, who urged American nations to stand "shoulder to shoulder" against foreign aggression when he addressed the opening session of the parley Tuesday, was sailing homeward from Montevideo, Uruguay, where he stopped for a few hours yesterday after leaving Buenos Aires Wednesday.)

Saavedra Lamas asserted American countries must not consider isolating themselves from Europe.

"We cannot consider the consolidation of peace while limiting its horizons," he declared.

"We cannot give way to suppositions of continental isolation, which would be asserting that we do not live on the same planet with the Old World."

Replying for the 20 delegations visiting Argentina, Foreign Minister Jose Espalter of Uruguay said:

"I would emphasize the affirmation of the United States President when he said democracy will solve

Rebels Seize Russian Ship As War Prize

Freighter Boarded Near Gibraltar After Two Warning Shots.

Fascist Pilots Mow Down Women and Children in Madrid Raids.

By the Associated Press.

Gibraltar, Dec. 4.—The Russian steamer Stepanhalturim was halted by insurgent Spanish warships in the Straits of Gibraltar today.

The vessel was halted within sight of Gibraltar, where she intended to refuel, when a Fascist gunboat convoyed by four armed trawlers fired two shots across her bow.

Insurgent officers boarded the Stepanhalturim and headed their prize of war toward Ceuta, Spanish Morocco, under escort of the insurgent fleet.

Noncombatants Strafed.

Madrid, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—A fleet of 31 rebel planes swept low over Madrid late today and mowed down fleeing women and children with machine-gun fire after dropping bombs in two raids on the Rosales district.

Women and children fell sprawling in the streets as they ran for doorways and subway tunnels. Casualties were great. Scores of noncombatants were buried in houses blown up by incendiary bombs along Mirano street.

Strafing of the panic-stricken Madrilenos in World War fashion was the finale of Madrid's most terrifying attack from the air.

Black bombers seemed to fill the sky. Their thundering projectiles carried destruction and death to virtually every section of the city, excepting the so-called neutral zone along the Paseo de la Castellana.

Flames Fill Sky.

The bombs completed the destruction of the Rosales district, between the Montana Barracks and West Park, leaving it a shambles. Fires, ignited by the incendiary bombs, filled the sky with smoke and flames.

The 31 planes appeared over Madrid at 2 p. m., flying lazily in perfect formation. For a time they merely circled the capital, then they swerved to the western part of the city and began dropping bombs like hail.

Casualties Are Heavy.

Salamanca, Spain, Dec. 4 (AP).—A Fascist insurgent communique today asserted Spanish Socialist losses in intense fighting south of Santander were so heavy 200 trucks were required to transport thousands of casualties.

The Socialists struggled for possession of the village of Montecelli in a raging conflict around El Espinosa del Tomares, and Fascists reported the Socialist losses to have been "most heavy."

The Socialist effort to break through the insurgent northern front in a drive on Burgos, seat of the Fascist junta, was held by the insurgents to have failed.

Propaganda Plane Down.

Annecy, France, Dec. 4 (AP).—A big transport plane of German manufacture loaded with Spanish Fascist propaganda pamphlets was found wrecked in the mountains near here today.

There was no sign of the crew of the plane, and it was believed they might have jumped and landed in huge snowdrifts covering most of the nearby area.

Julia Ward Howe Garters, Silk Hose Given to Museum

In the sanctity of the National Museum yesterday two dainty garters and a pair of historic lace silk stockings were exposed to view for a few fleeting moments and then were locked safely in a dark and impregnable safe.

The stocking and garters were presented to the museum by Mrs. John Elliott, daughter of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, author of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," who revealed they were part of her mother's wedding ensemble.

Museum officials were not prepared last night to reveal how—or when—the garters and stockings will be exposed to public gaze.

Several years ago Mrs. Elliott, herself author of 18 books, presented the museum with her mother's wedding gown and veil. She stopped off in Washington en route to Miami to present the accessories.

Radio Announcer Will Dance (In Pink Tights) for Toy Fund

One of the rarest stage treats of the entire 1936 season is in store for a theater filled with Washington youngsters on the morning of Saturday, December 12, just one week from today.

For on that date, either Arch McDonald, 220-pound WJSV sports announcer, or Arthur Godfrey, red-headed conductor of WJSV's morning "Sun Dial" program, will present his own interpretation of the famous Mme. Pavlowa's "Dance of the Dying Swan"—in full ballet costume, pink tights and all—on the stage of Loew's Capitol Theater.

The occasion will be a special children's morning show at the Capitol, admission to which will be one new toy or doll for The Washington Post's 1936 Toy and Doll Fund. The show has been arranged by Carter Barron, manager of Loew's Washington theaters, with a grand program of short film features, singing and dancing acts on the stage, community singing by the children to the accompaniment of the Capitol's organ and selected numbers by the Loew's Boys Band of 50 pieces.

The McDonald-Godfrey highlight of the morning's performance all came about when McDonald issued a challenge to Godfrey during his regular sports broadcast last night. McDonald stated that he would like to wager that his listeners over the air would contribute more dolls, toys and cash to The Post's Toy and Doll Fund during the coming week than would Godfrey's lis-

Crowds Roar Acclaim for Their King; Edward Won't Abdicate, He Pledges Mrs. Simpson as She Flees to France

'God Save King' and '3 Cheers for Missus,' Throngs Clamor.

Baldwin Jeered By Demonstrators

Police Cordon Hard Put to Handle Whitehall, Trafalgar Marchers.

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 4.—Shouting "three cheers for the new Queen!" a huge crowd jostled police in Trafalgar Square in the heart of London tonight as clamorous demonstrations in behalf of King Edward VIII swept through the city like wildfire.

Blue-coated bobbies, sweating and shoving, dispersed a crowd attempting to demonstrate noisily in front of the residence of the heir-presumptive Duke of York.

"Let the King know you are with him!" they roared, and waved banners bearing the same legend. Under police pressure, the crowd marched away singing, "God Save the King!" at the top of their lungs.

At Buckingham Palace, heavily reinforced police guards had their hands full controlling a swaying, surging throng that pressed against the high, iron-barbed fence to shout sympathy for the King in his throne-shaking clash with Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin.

Climb Monument.

Nimble-footed demonstrators scaled the base of towering Nelson Monument, in Trafalgar Square, and drew volleying cheers from the great crowd with their shouts:

"Edward is right! Baldwin is wrong!"

Police came running. "'Ere now! Move along!" they grunted, wedging their way through the sardine formation to reach the impromptu orators.

The crowd, good-natured, moved. "Three cheers for the new Queen! Three cheers for Mrs. Simpson!" they cried, again and again.

Thousands-strong, they swung along historic Haymarket en route to Piccadilly Circus, blocking traffic every few minutes to stop and sing of the national anthem.

Hundreds of girls and women marched with the crowd. Irate motorists tooted their horns in vain. The marchers ignored them. They were "on the King's business."

Down Whitehall, away from Trafalgar Square toward Old "Big Ben" and the Houses of Parliament, marched another column.

"We want our King! God save King Edward!"

Police hastily threw a cordon across the entrance to Downing street. Over their high-ridged helmets, the lights of Prime Minister Baldwin's home, at No. 10, were visible. The words of the crowd must have carried to the bulldog-jowled "country squire" who served a clear warning on King Edward today to give up his love or his throne.

Only officials, hurrying to and from Baldwin's sanctuary as the crisis neared its climax, were permitted entrance to the drab little street where another prime minister, Disraeli, forged Great Britain into an empire.

Demonstrations Spread.

Sporadic demonstration started everywhere—from exclusive Mayfair in the West End, through the Bohemian garlic-reeking streets of Soho, down to the proverty-ridden but intensively loyal districts of Cheapside, Whitechapel and Limehouse.

Old gentlemen in the club windows along Pall Mall frowned down as a shouting crowd paraded down the street. Up to their plush loungerooms came the chant:

"Do we want Edward? Yes! Do we want Baldwin? No-o-o!"

The negative was prolonged and vociferous.

The biggest crowds since tens of thousands, awe-stricken and silent, waited for the bulletin announcing the death of King George V last January, jammed Piccadilly Circus. "The King! The King!" they shouted. "God save the King!" re-

Successor Named To Van Sweringen

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—Herbert Fitzpatrick, vice president and general counsel of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Co., was selected tonight to become the new head of the former Van Sweringen railroad empire.

A statement by George A. Ball, Muncie, Ind., glass maker, and George A. Tomlinson, Cleveland ship operator, controlling interests of Midamerica Corporation, present top holding company of the Van Sweringen system, announced Fitzpatrick's appointment as president of Midamerica and as director to fill the vacancy created by the death of O. P. Van Sweringen.

O. P. Van Sweringen, the last of the two Cleveland brothers who had controlled immense railroad, real estate and traction interests in the East, Midwest and in the City of Cleveland, died on his way to New York for a conference with bankers on November 23 as the train was pulling into the Hoboken station.

Text of Baldwin's Statement

By the United Press.

London, Dec. 4.—Text of the eagerly awaited statement of Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin in the House of Commons today on the King Edward-Mrs. Simpson crisis follows:

"In view of widely circulated suggestions as to certain possibilities in event of the King's marriage, I think it would be advisable for me to make a statement.

"Suggestions have appeared in certain organs of the press yesterday and again today that if the King decided to marry his wife would not need to become Queen. Those ideas are without any legislative foundation.

"There is no such thing as what is called a morganatic marriage known to our law. The royal marriage act of 1772 has no application toward the sovereign himself. Its only effect is that a marriage of any other member of the royal family is null and void unless the sovereign's consent, declared under the great seal, is first obtained. This act, therefore, has nothing to do with the present case.

"The King himself requires no consent from any other authority to make his marriage legal, but, as I have said, the lady he marries, by the fact of her marriage to the King, necessarily becomes Queen.

"She herself, therefore, would enjoy the status, rights and privileges, which both by positive law and custom attach to that position and with which we are familiar in the cases of Her Majesty the late Alexandra and Her Majesty Queen Mary, and her children would be in direct line of succession to the throne.

"The only possible way this result could be avoided would be by legislation dealing with a particular case. His Majesty's Government are not prepared to introduce such legislation (cheers). Moreover, the matters to be dealt with are of common concern to the commonwealth as a whole and such a change could not be effected without the assent of all the dominions.

"I am satisfied from the inquiries I have made that this assent would not be forthcoming. I felt it right that I should make this statement before the House adjourns today in order to remove a widespread misunderstanding. At this moment I have no other statement to make."

Film Studios Shy At Royal Romance

Hollywood, Dec. 4 (AP).—Although it reads like the perfect scenario, the romance of the King of England and Mrs. Wallis Simpson never will be the basis for a major-made motion picture, first-ranking movie producers said tonight.

They guessed, however, one of the smaller independent studios would have a picture with such a plot on the screen before long.

"The censors in virtually every part of our foreign market would rule it away from the screen," an executive said. "And the bare fact of having made such a picture would do the industry incalculable harm, even though the picture was not shown."

Fascist Advocate Sides With Edward

London, Dec. 4 (AP).—Sir Oswald Mosley, who advocates fascism for Britain, sided today with King Edward against "a junta of politicians" in the grave constitutional crisis over the monarch's possible marriage to Wallis Warfield Simpson.

Speaking at an open-air meeting in Victoria Park Square, the Fascist leader asserted:

"Politicians created this grave crisis. They have created it because they have interfered with the King's private life.

"I say with all deliberation that before a junta of politicians can force the King to abdicate, this issue should be submitted to the votes of the people of Britain and the dominions."

Cabinet to Meet In London Today

Ruler's Wife Must Be Queen, Baldwin Says as House Cheers.

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 5 (Saturday).—Surging crowds cheered King Edward's name through the ancient streets of London early today while their monarch struggled against his prime minister's public ultimatum to choose between Britain's throne and Wallis Warfield Simpson.

Whether the youthful and once-gay sovereign had reached a decision, or still was determined to keep both his scepter and his right to marry whom he wished, no one save himself knew.

Alone save for servants in secluded Fort Belvedere, the sorely-beset King through the night sought an answer that would satisfy both the dictates of his heart and of his duty as ruler of the far-flung British Empire.

King Undecided.

He had not yet irrevocably made up his mind on any course, authoritative sources said, after his close friends urged him to bide his time and tell his government he had no intention of marrying anybody at the present crucial time.

[The United Press reported a powerful political faction in Parliament, led by Winston Churchill and Col. Josiah Wedgwood, a Laborite, is seeking to crystallize public sentiment for King Edward and block Prime Minister Baldwin's move to force abdication.—Editor's note.]

Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, who yesterday in unmistakable language delivered the challenge for those forces opposing marriage between the King and the American-born divorcee, was expected to give the anxious British public some further word today.

But there were no definite assurances of what means he would employ, or even if he would say anything further on the subject.

May Make Statement.

Some informed persons thought he might make known the results of his last night's session with Edward in a statement or in a cabinet communique possibly around noon. (7 a. m. Eastern standard time.)

Most quarters, however, expected no additional definite information would be disclosed by Baldwin until Monday, when Commons is scheduled to reconvene. The prime minister, however, they said, could on such an emergency as now exists summon the parliamentarians to meet on Saturday to hear his words.

While Edward sought an

Mrs. Simpson Flees to France, Phones Edward

Spends Night at Blois, and Leaves at 3 A. M.; Is Guarded Closely.

By the Associated Press.

She was accompanied by her entire party.

After asking earlier that she be called at 7 a. m., Mrs. Simpson rose at 3 a. m. and continued her voyage south.

She still kept her destination a closely guarded secret.

Mrs. Simpson arrived in Blois late last night and went immediately to the Hotel De France, where she and her companions were to spend the night.

A member of the hotel staff said she telephoned London soon after going to her room.

Her presence attracted little attention in the town, few of whose inhabitants knew her identity. Clerks said Mrs. Simpson registered under the name of Harrison, but later disclosed her true identity. A police guard was stationed about the hotel.

Leaving England only after what authoritative sources said was King Edward's assurances he would not abdicate his throne, she landed in France from a channel boat and sped southward by devious routes.

Once, in a little rural hamlet, she stopped to telephone back to England—to Fort Belvedere, where the King was struggling with his prime minister's challenge to choose between her and his throne.

Accompanied by a secretary and a stalwart guard who at times waxed pugnacious, Mrs. Simpson traveled in a speeding automobile all day long.

Those who said they saw the Simpson car rushing through Rouen and Evreux told of three persons inside, including the chauffeur. They said a second car followed,

Grandsire Foresaw Edward as the Last Of England's Kings

London, Dec. 4 (AP).—Loyal-hearted Britons, torn by the throne-shaking clash between King Edward VIII and Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, looked back tonight on a strange prophecy voiced by England's Edward VII.

Long forgotten in the face of apparently incontrovertible evidence of its fallacy, the dictum assumed sudden significance tonight as Edward VIII faced possible abdication and there was no certainty his brother, the heir-presumptive Duke of York, would accept the throne if Edward were forced out.

The prophecy was made more than a quarter of a century ago. Edward the Seventh was on the throne. His son, later to become George V, was then Duke of York. And Britain's present-day monarch was a wistful-eyed little lad with golden curly locks.

The three talked of dynasty and destiny. Bluff old Edward VII gazed long at his grandson. He placed his hands on the shoulders of the little Prince Edward and said solemnly:

"You will be the last King of England."

Two days ago the prophecy would have sounded fantastic. Now, if Edward abdicates and the Duke of York goes with him, the mantle of sovereignty—as forecast by Edward VII—would fall not on a King, but on the 10-year-old Princess Elizabeth, daughter of the Duke of York and next in line of succession.

Hamilton Seeks Confidence Vote As G.O.P. Head

Chairman Will Offer His Resignation to Test Sentiment.

By Franklyn Waltman.

Calling a meeting of the Republican National Committee in Chicago for December 17, John Hamilton, chairman of the group, last night revealed that he planned to submit his resignation in order to force a vote of confidence in his leadership of the party.

Hamilton revealed his plan in a letter to members of the national committee, made public at party headquarters here as the chairman, on vacation in Florida, was exhibiting a 7-foot sailfish as evidence of his angling ability. He indicated in his letter he was angling for a vote of confidence when he intimated his desire to remain at the party's helm, but held it would be "impossible for me to continue in an official capacity without an expression of confidence from the body of the committee."

He indicated that he was elected to the chairmanship last June at the suggestion of Gov. Alf M. Landon, the party's Presidential candidate, and that he could not be said "in the fullest sense to be the free choice of the committee." By submitting his resignation, Hamilton explained, he would afford "the individual members of the committee an opportunity to express themselves as to the management and conduct of the past campaign."

Has Liquidation Plan.

If the national committee refuses to accept the Hamilton resignation, thus giving him a vote of confidence, he will be prepared to lay before the Chicago meeting a plan for liquidating the party's $1,000,000 deficit incurred in the recent campaign and a program for an efficient permanent organization of a headquarters staff. He will also outline plans he has for improving the State and local Republican organizations.

Rejection of Hamilton's resignation is generally expected in Republican circles. No aspirants have revealed themselves for the Republican chairmanship and those members of the national committee who were available for comment last night seemed favorably inclined to giving him a vote of confidence, or at least refrained from urging acceptance of the resignation.

In isolated quarters within the Republican Party there has been some public criticism of Hamilton's management of the Landon campaign, but none of this has come from members of the national committee. Representative Hamilton Fish, of New York, has called for a change in the leadership of the party, singling out Hamilton for attack. Senator Gerald P. Nye, Republican, of North Dakota, and William F. Bleakley, defeated Republican gubernatorial candidate in New York, also have expressed dissatisfaction with the manner in which the campaign was conducted. In addition there has been some grumbling among the rank and file.

D. C. Leaders for Hamilton.

Most Republican leaders, however, take the view that victory was not in the cards for them this year, and that Hamilton, inheriting a disorganized and demoralized party, did the best that could be done under the circumstances.

For instance, Edward F. Colladay, Republican National Committeeman for the District of Columbia, pointed out that Hamilton attempted to do in four months what Will Hays in 1920 did after two and one-half years' work as party chairman. Mrs. Virginia White Speel, National Committeewoman for the District, expressed similar sentiments, and both said they favored giving Hamilton a unanimous vote of confidence.

Charles D. Hilles, New York Republican Committeeman, said he had no idea what the sentiment of that group toward Hamilton was, but that he had heard no talk of choosing a successor, according to the Associated Press. Illinois Republican National Committeeman George F. Harding said he was "favorable toward Hamilton," and added that he "made a good fight."

Representative Joseph W. Martin, Republican committeeman from Massachusetts and eastern manager of the recent campaign, was reported by the Associated Press as asserting that Hamilton "unquestionably will be re-elected Republican national chairman." Nebraska's committeeman, Hugh A. Butler, asserted that "I certainly will give him a vote of confidence."

It is possible that Fish may obtain the proxy of some member of the committee and attempt to lead a movement for ousting Hamilton. But such a move is not expected to get far, not only because Hamilton is liked by the committee, but because of the difficulty of persuading anyone else to shoulder the million-dollar deficit. Republican prospects are at a low ebb, and the job of chairman for a few years, at least, will be one of hard work without prerogatives or reward.

Hilles Backed Fletcher.

Should Fish get to the committee meeting and oppose Hamilton's continuance as chairman, it would probably have the effect of driving Hilles to Hamilton's defense because of long political enmity between the two New Yorkers. Hilles was cold to Hamilton and his fellow Kansan, Gov. Landon, last spring, and two years ago successfully supported Henry P. Fletcher for chairman against Hamilton. On that occasion Fish was a Hamilton supporter.

All indications, however, point to the continuance of Hamilton as the party chairman, with little or no opposition. By forcing the committee to give him a vote of confidence, the chairman will strengthen his own position within the party and will be fortified against the type of criticism recently directed against him by Fish and others.

Rejection of his resignation would leave Hamilton supreme within the Republican organization. It was reported last night that an incipient revolt was being organized against Hamilton by persons allied with William B. Bell, wealthy manufacturer and chairman of the Republican finance committee. During the campaign attaches who were brought to Republican headquarters by Bell frequently clashed with the Hamilton group there.

Although it was asserted in a reliable quarter that Hamilton made up his mind immediately after the election to force a vote of confidence in him, his unexpected action last night may have been accelerated by this incipient revolt against him. But whatever inspired his move, it appears it will meet with success since there is not time before the meeting to get a candidate to succeed him.

Faces Large Deficit.

The first task facing the Republican chairman is the clearing away of the party deficit, which it is understood, is chiefly in the form of indebtedness to printers and the radio broadcasting companies. This indebtedness was incurred in the name of Hamilton and C. B. Goodspeed, Republican treasurer, on authority of the executive committee of the national committee.

In revealing to the national committee his intention to lay his resignation before them, Hamilton made it clear that he was not "attempting to shirk the obligations and responsibilities which are mine—occasioned primarily by the campaign deficit." He added that 'irrespective of an yaction that may be taken by the committee at its meeting, I shall give my full time and whole-hearted effort until the deficit as a whole or at least a substantial part thereof is liquidated."

He explained he had called the meeting for such an early date "not only because Congress convenes shortly after the first of the year, but also because personal considerations require early action in order that I my plan my future affairs with some degree of certainty."

Landon Fishes in Florida.

Monticello, Fla., Dec. 4 (AP).—Campfire ashes blew into his breakfast plate, but Gov. Landon called for more eggs and hot cakes at his close-to-nature fishing camp in the Wacissa River today.

"I'm thoroughly enjoying this," said the Kansan. "I got used to ashes in the oil fields."

Landon was dressed in blue overalls, a leather jacket, blue neckerchief, slouch hat and boots.

There was deer meat in the camp, but the Governor said he "didn't get the deer." He killed "a few" duck before breakfast.

The Governor will go fishing into the Gulf of Mexico Monday. Later he probably will go to Louisiana, "where they tell me duck and geese are so thick you could kill them with a stick." He will return to Topeka December 11.

Economic Reforms Seen as Next Goal of Administration as 'Pump Priming' Days Pass.

By Franklyn Waltman

A GROWING consciousness on the part of leading Administration figures that their real problem during the next four years is to administer and control the forces of economic recovery has become apparent since the election.

WALTMAN.

This manifestation is of the first importance, because it calls for a changed emphasis and tempo on the part of the New Deal.

Although the New Deal always has been a mixture of recovery and reform, the greater emphasis has been given to setting in motion recuperative forces in the country's economic body. The time is now approaching when greater emphasis will be laid on reform measures—both administratively and in the way of further legislation—in order that the excesses of the past may be avoided.

Much in the way of reform—that in the past has been done in the name of recovery—and in some instances, done badly—will in the future be done openly under the label of reform. Instead of spending for purposes of economic pump priming, as in the past, measures to curb a too-rapid forward advance will in the future hold the forefront of the New Deal stage. Instead of monetary experimentation to raise price levels, devices will be sought to check the rise of prices. Instead of a housing program to provide work for the jobless, there will be a housing program to improve the sheltering of the poor.

The form which the Administration's new endeavors will take has not been revealed. Indeed, it is probable that they will be shaped to meet the course of events and the latter will be influenced in large part by the reaction of business and industry generally to what the New Deal is trying to do. Thus the key to the course of the New Deal for the next year or two would seem to be what business and industry proposes to do.

Although the specific program of the New Deal remains unknown, its general direction has been rather clearly indicated. It was indicated by the expressed concern of the President before his departure for Buenos Aires over the heavy inflow of gold from abroad and the rapidly increasing volume of foreign investment in this country.

It was indicated by recent discussions in which the board of governors of the Federal Reserve system have engaged. The chief topic of discussion in that quarter is the dangers of credit inflation inherent in the present economic situation. This is the chief topic of study and research among the board's attaches.

It is further indicated by the President's efforts to bring the Federal Budget into a closer balance between expenditures and receipts. It has been indicated by the publicly expressed willingness of the Treasury to advance financial operations in order to clear the path for any remedial, anti-inflationary steps which the Reserve system authorities may wish to take. It has been indicated by the earnest studies in progress in the Treasury for methods of sterilizing the inflow of gold and keeping it from further broadening the Nation's currency base.

And it was well illustrated by the forthright speech which SEC Chairman James M. Landis has just delivered to the annual convention of the Investment Bankers of America. In so many words Mr. Landis contended that the New Deal must think in terms of a situation wholly reversed from that of the last four years.

The motivation for the reversal of the New Deal's changed attitude springs not so much from New Deal ideology but from the realities of the current situation. From the buyer's market of the last few years, the country is being transformed into a seller's market. In the security markets the situation has become, as described by Landis, one of "rapidly rising markets, expanding volume and an apparently insatiable demand for capital issues."

Among the better informed on the consequences of such omens "apprehension over the trend has been aroused," to quote Landis again. And, as he well said, the people of this country are strongly resolved that "1929 shall not recur." The pressure for putting on brakes is inspired not only by what is happening in the security markets. It comes also from the rising cost of living, by far the most impelling motive for the Administration to reverse its direction. Unless President Roosevelt successfully can cope with that problem, it will become his Waterloo.

Our British friends last winter and the previous winter expressed an inability to understand why we let constitutional objections stand in the way of the more abundant life and proudly explained the superiority of their system. But hasn't there been something in the newspapers in the last few days about a constitutional crisis in England?

Hong Kong-Manila Flights Begin Soon

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—J. T. Trippe, president of Pan-American Airways, tonight announced that regular passenger service between Manila and Hongkong would be started in the near future, completing the company's route from California to China.

Scheduled flights were started recently between California and Manila, with stops at Honolulu, Midway and Wake Islands and Guam.

Trippe, returning from a 36,466-mile flight around the world, during which he studied aviation developments in 19 different countries, said the transpacific service probably would be extended to Hongkong sometime after January 1. The final lap is 720 miles.

Connections at Hongkong will include the Imperial Airways System operated by Great Britain and the Chinese National Air Co., operated in China by Pan-American.

Trippe, returned across the South Atlantic in the dirigible Hindenburg and then flew North in Pan-American Clipper ships.

Wilbert Robinson's Widow Dies in West

Chicago, Dec. 4 (AP).—Mrs. Wilbert "Ma" Robinson, of Baltimore, Md., widow of Wilbert Robinson, former president and manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers Baseball Club, died here early today.

Death was attributed by physicians to a paralytic stroke. She died in the hotel apartment of a niece, Miss Mary Ann Healy, whom she had been visiting for the past five weeks. Hotel attaches said Mrs. Robinson was stricken Wednesday.

Accompanied by Miss Healy and Mrs. Robinson's daughter, Mrs. Frank H. Gunther, of Spring Lake, N. J., the body was placed aboard a Pennsylvania train tonight for Baltimore, where services will be held Monday.

Mrs. Gunther came to Chicago yesterday to be with her mother, a son, Harry L. Robinson, of Baltimore, also survives.

Landis Assails 'Selfish' Foes Of Public Good

Bankers Urged to Assume Active Role to Assist National Recovery.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Augusta, Ga., Dec. 4.—Finance can justify itself to the Nation by responding to the "national desire to move closer to an ideal of industrial and financial security" as reflected in the "mandate of November third," said Securities and Exchange Chairman James M. Landis here today.

Landis, addressing the twenty-fifth annual convention of the Investment Bankers of America, whose members came hoping to hear whether the Administration will go to the left or the right in administering recovery, forestalled the unspoken question by insisting that finance and industry must bear a proportionate share of this responsibility to the public.

His address was featured by a savage attack on the "handful of men" in the utilities industry "who had no vision but that of the past, and of men whose political hatred for the direction of American life made them believe that through some abracadabra of legal learning they could turn it backward."

Inaction Assailed.

He said:

"Where yesterday we saw the tragedies of irresponsible action, today we are face to face with the tragedies of selfish and irresponsible inaction.

"In this contest of power between a handful of men and a nation, no longer lethargic but vocal and tense, there can be no question of the final outcome . . . The unnecessary cost and what may be unwonted delay in a recovery now overdue, is chargeable elsewhere than to government.

"Administration in this field has thus been partly driven into stagnancy, forced to take up the gauntlet of a legalistic challenge, but still hopeful that a recognition of the demands of the new recovery will become plain to a handful of men, and hopeful that from such a recognition will spring the program of expansion, readjustment and employment that already a year ago should have been in the doing."

Demands Bankers' Aid.

Landis handed back to the bankers the problem of the direction of the administration of recovery—whether left or right, saying:

"Where you and others ask that question of government, government seems to me to be asking the same question of you . . . How are you going to interpret the mandate of 27,000,000 people? . . . The interpretation of these desires for finance is thus primarily with the industry itself and only secondarily that of government."

Stressing that the SEC was formed as evidence of "the public resolution that 1929 shall not recur," he pictured the process of the past three years as one in which "law has been carefully built upon law to the end that finance shall not be a game of magic to mystify, bewilder and mislead the investing public, but a forthright business deriving honest business profits from open dealings with the customers who come to its counters in good faith, glad to pay a fair commission for a fair service performed."

Changes Cited.

Landis described a gradual change in attitude by the bankers from the "tearful protestations" of the emergency period and "the current tendency of these same individuals to cut corners" today.

He gave but few hints of the SEC's actual program for the immediate future, but drove again and again on his theme that recovery must not follow the traditional patterns of boom and crash, concluding finally that the "real concern should be with the causes that place strains and stresses . . . upon the financial mechanism," and that "effort must be directed toward closing the investment machinery to the play of irresponsible forces of such a character."

Passing to direct analysis of the holding company field, Landis said: "Maintenance and construction budgets were curtailed in the years of depression. Meanwhile, invention and education in the uses of electric power made for an increasing demand. Surplus capacity is in many cases on the point of exhaustion. Every indication points toward the need for expansion and the concomitant employment of both men and capital.

Inaction Criticized.

"The direction of business administration for recovery should plainly be that of courage to assume responsibilities for fulfilling the growing needs of communities."

After criticising the delay and inaction toward expansion in this field, he concluded with the statement that the success of the administration of the "new recovery" can rest only upon "a recognition of the need for continuing industrial and financial reorientation—practical in attainment, true, but always idealistic in direction.

"You cannot forget that the last recovery was your recovery and that it almost destroyed you. Fairly or unfairly, you became the scapegoats of a bewildered and discouraged people.

"This new recovery . . . will also be your recovery. . . . If the mandate of last November means to us that we must not fail, more clearly does it mean to you that you dare not fail."

Eight hundred of the Nation's leading investment bankers attended the session addressed by the former Harvard law professor, who told reporters after the meeting that the SEC will submit next week to the New York Stock Exchange concrete suggestions for carrying out a broker-dealer segregation on the security exchanges' floors.

'List Your Aliases In Pension Claim,' Security Unit Says

Persons who are working under assumed names must sign the assumed names to their applications for account numbers under the social security old-age pension system, the Bureau of Internal Revenue ruled yesterday.

However, employes who have concealed their correct names or ages from their employers are expected to give the correct names or ages on slips attached to the applications. Age claims will be investigated before pensions are paid.

The close of business today is the deadline for filing applications for account numbers.

Fund Revealed Still Available For WPA's Use

87-Million 'Backlog' Found by Treasury May Tide Work Through Crisis.

By the Associated Press.

Existence of a "backlog" of unallocated work relief funds, which might be used to carry WPA activities well into February if the new Congress is slow in voting additional money, was disclosed yesterday by Treasury officials.

The revelation came as WPA officials went ahead with plans to curtail pay rolls and make the fast vanishing $272,000,000 now on hand last as long as possible. They have estimated this would be exhausted by January 20, if Congress forced liquidation of the organization by that date.

In addition to the sum at present available to WPA, the Treasury officials said, $87,000,000 of the current works progress appropriation still is unallocated at any agency.

Officials Doubt Move.

President Roosevelt might turn this over to WPA if necessary, although works officials insisted they were counting on no such windfall because some or all of this money might be allocated elsewhere.

Yesterday's developments closely followed an unsuccessful effort by the United States conference of mayors to persuade officials here not to curtail work relief at this time. The mayors since have appealed by cable to President Roosevelt, returning home from the All-American peace conference in South America.

WPA has issued a general economy order which it hopes will result in removal of approximately 425,000 persons from its rolls.

Quotas have not been established by districts, and projects are not to be abandoned, officials said.

New Projects Banned.

On the contrary, they added, new projects are being approved if they can be completed by January 20 and supplemental allotments are being made where funds are exhausted.

The officials asserted no one in actual need would be removed from the rolls.

They said the economies are to be effected by:

1. Transfer of 250,000 drought victims to the rural rehabilitation division of the Resettlement Administration, whose grants to such persons average about half the amount of the WPA's drought relief wages;

2. A general combing of the rolls which WPA officials say they hope will remove about 150,000 employes who have other sources of income;

3. Dismissal of 20,000 nonrelief workers and 5,000 administrative employes.

Sergeant Found Slain.

Fort Bragg, N. C., Dec. 4 (AP).—Sergt. Samuel Fazey, 47, a veteran of 20 years' service in the U. S. Army, was found dead with a pistol wound through his head today in the operations office of the air field here. A pistol was found nearby. Fazey, a native of England, was a member of the Second Balloon Squadron. An inquiry was ordered.

Midland Strike Settled; 5 Auto Plants Reopen

1,800 Steel Workers Back on Jobs, 72,000 Motor Employes Can Work.

By the Associated Press.

One of the Nation's major strikes ended yesterday, but deadlocks persisted in two others.

Settlement of a strike of 1,800 workers at the Midland Steel Products Co. in Detroit released a brake on automobile production in that motor capital. Terms of the peace pact included upward wage adjustments, a 45-hour week and abolition of the piece-work system.

The week-long suspension of activities had resulted in the temporary closing of four divisions of the Chrysler Corporation and the Lincoln-Zephyr division of the Ford Motor Co. because of a shortage of steel body frames.

One authoritative source gauged the curtailment at approximately 5,000 units in the daily assembly volume at the motor car plants, while President Homer Martin of the United Automobile Workers of America estimated 72,000 persons were made idle during the stalemate.

True Is Offered.

G. W. McCaoe, head of the Federation of Flat Glass Workers, offered to order 1,300 members participating in a "sit down" demonstration at the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. in Ottawa, Ill., to resume work if officials of the firm would assure him the Ottawans would not be forced to turn out orders for the Chrysler Motor Co.

The Ottawa employes have idled at their benches for three days. They claimed the $4,000,000 Chrysler order was sent there from the Pittsburgh Glass Co. to defeat the strike of 6,000 Pittsburgh plate workers who walked out six weeks ago.

No move to end the Pittsburgh plate controversy was essayed.

Peace negotiations in the West Coast maritime labor dispute came to another halt when coastwise shipping failed to meet radio telegraphers' union spokesmen at San Francisco. Hopes for a settlement of a separate strike of seamen and ships officers on the Gulf Coast also waned when deck and engineering officers elected to enter no agreement with employers until the employers reached an understanding with seamen. A man was shot on the Houston (Tex.) waterfront.

On the other hand, a settlement was indicated in the controversy involving New York longshoremen.

At Watertown, S. Dak., 250 farmers gathered at a mass meeting called to protest their removal from WPA rolls.

At New York, 125 striking WPA workers who took possession of a Federal project office Thursday after hearing reports of a reduction in WPA employment ended their demonstration.

The Kewaneer Manufacturing Co. closed its Niles, Mich., plant after an undetermined number of its 600 hands walked out.

all problems of internal order and of all international conflicts and will justly solve all social and economic antagonisms which cause unrest in the world at present."

He urged the conference "prepare solid bases for a new commercial and economic policy to develop our countries among themselves," in addition to fortifying the peace structure.

Mrs. Burton T. Musser, of Salt Lake City, a United States representative at the parley, presided over the special session which received the peace petition from the People's Mandate Committee to End War.

Mrs. Caroline O'Day, Democratic Representative from New York, presented the document.

Members of the United States delegation were chosen to committees as follows:

Peace organization — Sumner Welles, Assistant Secretary of State; A. A. Berle, jr., chamberlain of New York City, and Charles G. Fenwick, professor of international law at Bryn Mawr College.

Neutrality—Alexander W. Weddell, United States Ambassador to Argentina; Mrs. Musser, Welles and Fenwick.

Arms limitation — Michael F. Doyle, Philadelphia lawyer; Alexander F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Engineers; Weddell and Mrs. Musser.

Juridical—Fenwick, Berle and Doyle.

Intellectual co-operation — Weddell, Mrs. Musser and Whitney.

Francisco Castillo Najero, Mexican ambassador to Washington, was elected chairman of the committee on organization of peace, by a vote of 19 to 1 over Chilean Foreign Minister Miguel Cruchaga.

Alberto Ulloa, former foreign minister of Peru, was chosen head of the neutrality committee. He received 16 votes, while a Colombian, Lopez Pumarejo, and a Uruguayan, Pedro Manini Rios, obtained two each.

Welles was unanimously elected chairman of the committee on economic problems, in which it was expected Secretary Hull's program of reciprocal trade treaties will be pushed.

Leadership of the committee for limitation of armaments went to Luis Barros Borgono, Chilean ambassador to Argentina, who was given 13 votes while other ballots were divided among several nominees.

Edward Promises Mrs. Simpson He Will Not Abdicate, Friends Assert in London

King, Secluded At Belvedere, Weighs Choice

No Compromise Is Possible on Marriage, Baldwin Tells Commons.

answer for the dilemma, the woman whose friendship caused the empire crisis, spent the night in southern France en route to a secret hideaway.

Mrs. Simpson, who friends said consented to leave England only at Edward's assurance he would not abdicate the throne of his forefathers, registered under the name of Harrison in Blois early today.

Hotel clerks said she and her party, including a secretary and a bodyguard, would leave at dawn—for the Riviera villa of one of her friends. This may be either Mr. and Mrs. Herman Rogers, of New York, or Sir Charles and Lady Mendl.

Dominions' Views Cited.

Adding to the weight of empire on the shoulders of the slim monarch last night was the pressure brought to bear by representatives of his realm.

It was learned Baldwin, while closeted with Edward in Belvedere for their third session in as many days and their fourth of the week, pointedly told him he must remember that under the statute of Westminster, he was King of each dominion as well as King and Emperor of the British Empire.

The source for this disclosure said further that Baldwin's statement in Commons "reduced the issue to a clear cut one" with next move up to Edward himself.

When the King's final decision would be made known was as uncertain as what it would be.

The fact that Baldwin called a cabinet session for Saturday and that he summoned Viscount Craigavon, Premier of Northern Ireland, from Belfast to London, indicated the King had not determined on what he must do.

But for the crowds jostling through London's streets all night there was only one answer:

"God save the King! God save the new Queen!"

Baldwin Is Firm.

Earlier in the day, while the empire and the world at large hung on every syllable, Baldwin in unmistakable language warned the King, in effect, to exert his will over that of his government and his dominions if he wished—but to sacrifice the throne of his forefathers as the price.

The tight-lipped prime minister served notice to the world he is as irrevocably determined as ever to force the willful sovereign to choose between his right to marry as he wished and his right to retain the scepter of the British Empire.

Anxious subjects, torn between loyalty to their King and respect for his government, had hoped Baldwin's speech would leave some clear way out of the crisis.

All such hopes were dashed by the plain phrases in which the stern prime minister couched his ultimatum.

Any so-called morganatic marriage by which Mrs. Simpson might become the King's legal wife but not his Queen is out of the question, Baldwin said.

British law, he pointed out, made no provision for such an alliance.

Edward might marry legally whomsoever he chose, Baldwin told the tense members of Parliament, but his wife must become automatically the Queen of England, a rank Baldwin is determined shall not fall to Mrs. Simpson, a twice-divorced woman.

Mrs. Simpson Secluded.

The two principals in the amazing modern enactment of the love against an empire theme were miles apart today while the forces of a kingdom were being brought to bear on the determination of a young monarch to marry according to dictates of his own heart and conscience without interference from anybody.

Mrs. Simpson, carefully and at times pugnaciously shielded from the curious, was resting at Blois. She may go to a secret hideaway until the King should make his decision for her or the throne, or should work out a way to keep both—an eventuality that seemed doomed to frustration tonight.

Edward, weary and sore of heart after his third day of struggling against the tide of empire, sought refuge in his secluded country lodge at Fort Belvedere—where Mrs. Simpson stood side by side with him throughout the ordeal of Thursday, fleeing only upon Edward's insistence, friends said.

There was no word forthcoming from the heavily guarded retreat of how the King reacted to Baldwin's flatly clear ultimatum—official verification of what Baldwin was generally believed to have told Edward in three stormy sessions this week.

Holds Compromise Impossible

After an earlier refusal to answer questions on the crisis from the floor, to which he repeated his reply of the day before that he "had no statement to make," Baldwin late in the afternoon finally arose again and solemnly intoned his realization of "the advisability of making a statement."

Frequent cheers greeted the prime minister's clipped sentences of assurance that he and his ministers are determined to force the King's hand.

His words were uttered after repeated efforts from the floor sought public explanation of Baldwin's private views.

Baldwin's assurance his government was not prepared to introduce legislation permitting a morganatic marriage for the King under present circumstances was greeted with loud and prolonged cheers, clear indication of the majority sentiment among the members.

Clement R. Attlee, Laborite leader, played the role he had taken the day before and formally sought to draw out the prime minister in delicately phrased questions.

Heavily, Baldwin arose to each attempt to say he "had nothing to add" to previous responses that he "had no statement."

Those regarded as stanch champions of the monarch in the crisis were left without an opportunity to speak their views because of the suddenness with which the session was adjourned after Baldwin's remarks.

Included among those thought to be aligned on the side of the King were Col. Josiah Wedgwood and Winston Churchill, generally mentioned as the statesman on whom Edward would first call to form a new cabinet should Baldwin and his ministers resign.

Baldwin's Face Drawn.

Baldwin throughout the dark day plainly evidenced the strain he had been under since he took the leadership of those bitterly opposed to any match between Edward and the former Baltimore woman.

His face drawn and heavy, he frequently leaned far forward in his zeal, his coat drooping over his red dispatch case.

The events of the day, bursting upon a British populace kept in ignorance of the crisis by weeks of voluntary press censorship, definitely laid the next move at Edward's door.

Baldwin had spoken as he said for his government and the dominions. The picture he painted was one of gloom for Edward should he cleave to Mrs. Simpson.

Mrs. Simpson gone—at the insistence of the King, friends said—her lavish Cumberland Terrace home, in which she and Edward spent so many gay hours, was occupied only by servants and her "Aunt Bessie," Mrs. D. B. Merryman, of Washington, D. C.

Four trunks and several other pieces of luggage labeled "Miss Burke" were placed aboard a channel boat this afternoon to be sent to Mrs. Simpson wherever she might be.

Friends said they believed Mrs. Simpson would be joined in her retreat by her "Aunt Bessie," who came to her side when her niece began to feel the blows of censure which followed her divorce from Ernest A. Simpson.

All indications were Baldwin's challenge to Edward had been thrown down with the full consent of his ministers with whom he had been in session after each development in the past three days.

Efforts to persuade Baldwin to steer a careful middle course and avoid a greater loss of the Crown's prestige than had already been caused were understood to have been made by at least two ministers. They were Home Secretary Sir John Simon and Alfred Duff Cooper, secretary of state for war.

The royal family, meanwhile, kept its counsel with no outward indication of how Queen Mary and the King's brother regarded the situation.

Highest authorities declared as absurd reports that the Duke of York, next in line of succession, would leave the country.

Another report that Queen Mary had retired to more than customary seclusion was likewise termed untrue.

Queen Mary, it was said, always had been "in seclusion" as far as Mrs. Simpson was concerned.

Radiophotos: London Gets First News of Mrs. Simpson

News vendors in London and other cities of the British Isles displayed prominent signs hawking news of the constitutional crisis the empire faces as a result of King Edward's friendship for Mrs. Simpson.

Lady Mendl, wife of Sir Charles Mendl, at whose villa near Versailles, France, it is thought Mrs. Wallis Simpson will be guest. Lady Mendl, the former Elsie de Wolfe, was for many years a member of the Empire Theater Stock Co. She is a warm friend of Miss Anne Morgan, of the banking family.

Australian Parliament Called in Simpson Case

'All-for-Love' Romances Dot Royal History

From Cleopatra to King Carol, Many Instances Found in Past.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 4.—England's King Edward VIII will be following an old royal custom if he gives up his throne for the friendship of Mrs. Wallis Simpson.

Rulers have abdicated to keep the favor of women ever since monarchies began.

A famous example involved Cleopatra. Antony lost his place in the Third Triumvirate of Rome due to that affair.

The practice has not changed much with time. A few years ago King Carol of Rumania was given the same choice that England's King now faces.

As crown prince, Carol married morganatically a commoner, Zizi Lambrino, and they had a son. The nation's hostility to the match forced him to abdicate. Later, he divorced her, married Princess Helen of Greece, and assumed the Rumanian throne. Lately his subjects have complained about his red-haired friend, Mme. Lupescu.

The late King Manuel II of Portugal was a gay blade. He had a weakness for dancers—a Gypsy in Paris, a Russian ballerina and a Parisian actress, Gaby Deslys, all claimed his attention. His subjects didn't like it. In 1908 he heard guns outside the palace and was told he'd better leave. He never went back.

The same sort of thing was happening in the English line of kings 1,000 years ago. King Edwy the Fair, who reigned from 955 to 959, married a cousin, Ethelgiva, without benefit of clergy, a year before he took the throne. When he refused to give her up, the clergy, led by the famous St. Dunstan, seized her, burned her face with red-hot irons and banished her to Ireland, where she died of torture at the age of 18. Then they forced Edwy to abdicate and replaced him with his younger brother, Edgar.

Henry II, who sat on the throne from 1154 to 1189, quit suddenly after quite a bit of trouble between his wife, Queen Eleanore, and his girl friend, Joan Clifford, the "Fair Rosamond," all the poets wrote about later.

King John (Lackland), who signed the Magna Charta in his rule from 1199 to 1216, did not pause to consider the effect when he divorced his first wife and seized a second. Pope Innocent III excommunicated him. In those days, excommunicated persons just weren't kings.

Edward II was forced to quit after reigning from 1307 to 1327. His wife, Queen Isabella of France, was bored with him. She had him murdered later to make sure of domestic peace.

The usual formula was reversed by brave Margaret of Anjou, queen of Henry VI. When he abdicated in face of the forces of Joan of Arc, Margaret raised an army and put the crown back on his head. But it was no use. Henry had to abdicate all over again.

His father's women friends caused trouble for Edwrd V. He abdicated because of claims he was an illegitimate child.

William of Orange reached the English throne in 1688 at the invitation of the British people, who forced out James II after he married a Catholic, Mary Beatrice. William and his queen, Mary, were both Protestants.

Irene, Empress of the East, put her son, Constantine VI, to death in 788 in order to marry Charlemagne, the Emperor of the West. But her subjects opposed the match, and she had to abdicate.

Robert II, who ruled France from 996 to 1031, was threatened with excommunication unless he divorced his wife, a cousin, Bertha. He did what the Pope said, and saved his crown.

The Count of Castile tried to force abdication of King Ordono III, of Spain. Ordono got even by divorcing the count's daughter.

The good Queen Christina, of Sweden, was strangely similar and yet a strange contrast to England's Edward VIII. Like him, she was loved by her subjects. As he did while he was Prince of Wales, she refused her subjects' entreaties that she marry but instead of acquiring a friend, as King Edward has, she abdicated to get away from marriage and died an eccentric old maid.

containing two French-speaking British detectives.

There were no official announcements of any kind concerning the destination of the American-born divorcee.

From scattered bits of information, the curious picked her route through the dusty byways of southern France.

Her car was reported to have passed through Orleans at 6 p. m.

At the time the automobile took the road to Blois.

Persons in Chartres said they saw her car driven through their city, southbound, along the route to the Rhone Valley and the Riviera.

Those who said they saw Mrs. Simpson from not too great a distance said she appeared to be in radiant health, with no apparent indications that she had recently been ill, as some London reports said.

Her chic figure was smartly turned out in a rust-brown traveling suit. The sedan in which she rode was dark blue of American make, similar in accoutrements to cars in Edward's royal garages.

Immediately after arriving in Rouen, Mrs. Simpson and her party repaired to the Hotel de la Poste to freshen up after the channel crossing.

They remained inside for some time after the manager said he had received a telephone call from the British Embassy in Paris that the guests would not be required to register.

An actress and another bystander were knocked aside and their cameras smashed by the bodyguard as they attempted to photograph Mrs. Simpson walking from the hotel to her car.

Some persons thought the Versailles villa of Lady Mendl, wife of the press attache of the British Embassy, might be the eventual destination of Mrs. Simpson. Caretakers said nobody was home, but great activity was noticed around and in the villa, where laborers have worked for the last few days.

Another probable hideaway for the fleeing woman was suggested as the villa of Lou Viei at Cannes, which belongs to Herman Rogers and his socially prominent wife, of New York.

Lady Mendl, wife of Sir Charles Mendl, at whose Versailles villa Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson may seek sanctuary, is one of England's most gracious hostesses.

Lady Mendl, the former Elsie de Wolfe, was for many years a member of the famous Empire Theater stock company with John Drew, Maude Adams, Sir Guy Standing and Margaret Illington. Later she managed her own company.

In 1926 Lady Mendl married Sir Charles, at present press attache at the British Embassy in Paris. For many years Lady Mendl had been a close friend of Miss Anne Morgan, a sister of J. P. Morgan.

Hamilton Seeks Confidence Vote As G.O.P. Head

Chairman Will Offer His Resignation to Test Sentiment.

By Franklyn Waltman.

Calling a meeting of the Republican National Committee in Chicago for December 17, John Hamilton, chairman of the group, last night revealed that he planned to submit his resignation in order to force a vote of confidence in his leadership of the party.

Hamilton revealed his plan in a letter to members of the national committee, made public at party headquarters here as the chairman, on vacation in Florida, was exhibiting a 7-foot sailfish as evidence of his angling ability. He indicated in his letter he was angling for a vote of confidence when he intimated his desire to remain at the party's helm, but held it would be "impossible for me to continue in an official capacity without an expression of confidence from the body of the committee."

He indicated that he was elected to the chairmanship last June at the suggestion of Gov. Alf M. Landon, the party's Presidential candidate, and that he could not be said "in the fullest sense to be the free choice of the committee." By submitting his resignation, Hamilton explained, he would afford "the individual members of the committee an opportunity to express themselves as to the management and conduct of the past campaign."

Has Liquidation Plan.

If the national committee refuses to accept the Hamilton resignation, thus giving him a vote of confidence, he will be prepared to lay before the Chicago meeting a plan for liquidating the party's $1,000,000 deficit incurred in the recent campaign and a program for an efficient permanent organization of a headquarters staff. He will also outline plans he has for improving the State and local Republican organizations.

Rejection of Hamilton's resignation is generally expected in Republican circles. No aspirants have revealed themselves for the Republican chairmanship and those members of the national committee who were available for comment last night seemed favorably inclined to giving him a vote of confidence, or at least refrained from urging acceptance of the resignation.

In isolated quarters within the Republican Party there has been some public criticism of Hamilton's management of the Landon campaign, but none of this has come from members of the national committee. Representative Hamilton Fish, of New York, has called for a change in the leadership of the party, singling out Hamilton for attack. Senator Gerald P. Nye, Republican, of North Dakota, and William F. Bleakley, defeated Republican gubernatorial candidate in New York, also have expressed dissatisfaction with the manner in which the campaign was conducted. In addition there has been some grumbling among the rank and file.

D. C. Leaders for Hamilton.

Most Republican leaders, however, take the view that victory was not in the cards for them this year, and that Hamilton, inheriting a disorganized and demoralized party, did the best that could be done under the circumstances.

For instance, Edward F. Colladay, Republican National Committeeman for the District of Columbia, pointed out that Hamilton attempted to do in four months what Will Hays in 1920 did after two and one-half years' work as party chairman. Mrs. Virginia White Speel, National Committeewoman for the District, expressed similar sentiments, and both said they favored giving Hamilton a unanimous vote of confidence.

Charles D. Hilles, New York Republican Committeeman, said he had no idea what the sentiment of that group toward Hamilton was, but that he had heard no talk of choosing a successor, according to the Associated Press. Illinois Republican National Committeeman George F. Harding said he was "favorable toward Hamilton," and added that he "made a good fight."

Representative Joseph W. Martin, Republican committeeman from Massachusetts and eastern manager of the recent campaign, was reported by the Associated Press as asserting that Hamilton "unquestionably will be re-elected Republican national chairman." Nebraska's committeeman, Hugh A. Butler, asserted that "I certainly will give him a vote of confidence."

It is possible that Fish may obtain the proxy of some member of the committee and attempt to lead a movement for ousting Hamilton. But such a move is not expected to get far, not only because Hamilton is liked by the committee, but because of the difficulty of persuading anyone else to shoulder the million-dollar deficit. Republican prospects are at a low ebb, and the job of chairman for a few years, at least, will be one of hard work without prerogatives or reward.

Hilles Backed Fletcher.

Should Fish get to the committee meeting and oppose Hamilton's continuance as chairman, it would probably have the effect of driving Hilles to Hamilton's defense because of long political enmity between the two New Yorkers. Hilles was cold to Hamilton and his fellow Kansan, Gov. Landon, last spring, and two years ago successfully supported Henry P. Fletcher for chairman against Hamilton. On that occasion Fish was a Hamilton supporter.

All indications, however, point to the continuance of Hamilton as the party chairman, with little or no opposition. By forcing the committee to give him a vote of confidence, the chairman will strengthen his own position within the party and will be fortified against the type of criticism recently directed against him by Fish and others.

Rejection of his resignation would leave Hamilton supreme within the Republican organization. It was reported last night that an incipient revolt was being organized against Hamilton by persons allied with William B. Bell, wealthy manufacturer and chairman of the Republican finance committee. During the campaign attaches who were brought to Republican headquarters by Bell frequently clashed with the Hamilton group there.

Although it was asserted in a reliable quarter that Hamilton made up his mind immediately after the election to force a vote of confidence in him, his unexpected action last night may have been accelerated by this incipient revolt against him. But whatever inspired his move, it appears it will meet with success since there is not time before the meeting to get a candidate to succeed him.

Faces Large Deficit.

The first task facing the Republican chairman is the clearing away of the party deficit, which it is understood, is chiefly in the form of indebtedness to printers and the radio broadcasting companies. This indebtedness was incurred in the name of Hamilton and C. B. Goodspeed, Republican treasurer, on authority of the executive committee of the national committee.

In revealing to the national committee his intention to lay his resignation before them, Hamilton made it clear that he was not "attempting to shirk the obligations and responsibilities which are mine—occasioned primarily by the campaign deficit." He added that "irrespective of an yaction that may be taken by the committee at its meeting, I shall give my full time and whole-hearted effort until the deficit as a whole or at least a substantial part thereof is liquidated."

He explained he had called the meeting for such an early date "not only because Congress convenes shortly after the first of the year, but also because personal considerations require early action in order that I my plan my future affairs with some degree of certainty."

Landon Fishes in Florida.

Monticello, Fla., Dec. 4 (AP).—Campfire ashes blew into his breakfast plate, but Gov. Landon called for more eggs and hot cakes at his close-to-nature fishing camp in the Wacissa River today.

"I'm thoroughly enjoying this," said the Kansan. "I got used to ashes in the oil fields."

Landon was dressed in blue overalls, a leather jacket, blue neckerchief, slouch hat and boots.

There was deer meat in the camp, but the Governor said he "didn't get the deer." He killed "a few" duck before breakfast.

The Governor will go fishing into the Gulf of Mexico Monday. Later he probably will go to Louisiana, "where they tell me duck and geese are so thick you could kill them with a stick." He will return to Topeka December 11.

Economic Reforms Seen as Next Goal of Administration as 'Pump Priming' Days Pass.

By Franklyn Waltman

A GROWING consciousness on the part of leading Administration figures that their real problem during the next four years is to administer and control the forces of economic recovery has become apparent since the election.

WALTMAN.

This manifestation is of the first importance, because it calls for a changed emphasis and tempo on the part of the New Deal.

Although the New Deal always has been a mixture of recovery and reform, the greater emphasis has been given to setting in motion recuperative forces in the country's economic body. The time is now approaching when greater emphasis will be laid on reform measures—both administratively and in the way of further legislation—in order that the excesses of the past may be avoided.

Much in the way of reform—that in the past has been done in the name of recovery—and in some instances, done badly—will in the future be done openly under the label of reform. Instead of spending for purposes of economic pump priming, as in the past, measures to curb a too-rapid forward advance will in the future hold the forefront of the New Deal stage. Instead of monetary experimentation to raise price levels, devices will be sought to check the rise of prices. Instead of a housing program to provide work for the jobless, there will be a housing program to improve the sheltering of the poor.

The form which the Administration's new endeavors will take has not been revealed. Indeed, it is probable that they will be shaped to meet the course of events and the latter will be influenced in large part by the reaction of business and industry generally to what the New Deal is trying to do. Thus the key to the course of the New Deal for the next year or two would seem to be what business and industry proposes to do.

Although the specific program of the New Deal remains unknown, its general direction has been rather clearly indicated. It was indicated by the expressed concern of the President before his departure for Buenos Aires over the heavy inflow of gold from abroad and the rapidly increasing volume of foreign investment in this country.

It was indicated by recent discussions in which the board of governors of the Federal Reserve system have engaged. The chief topic of discussion in that quarter is the dangers of credit inflation inherent in the present economic situation. This is the chief topic of study and research among the board's attaches.

It is further indicated by the President's efforts to bring the Federal Budget into a closer balance between expenditures and receipts. It has been indicated by the publicly expressed willingness of the Treasury to advance financial operations in order to clear the path for any remedial, anti-inflationary steps which the Reserve system authorities may wish to take. It has been indicated by the earnest studies in progress in the Treasury for methods of sterilizing the inflow of gold and keeping it from further broadening the Nation's currency base.

And it was well illustrated by the forthright speech which SEC Chairman James M. Landis has just delivered to the annual convention of the Investment Bankers of America. In so many words Mr. Landis contended that the New Deal must think in terms of a situation wholly reversed from that of the last four years.

The motivation for the reversal of the New Deal's changed attitude springs not so much from New Deal ideology but from the realities of the current situation. From the buyer's market of the last few years, the country is being transformed into a seller's market. In the security markets the situation has become, as described by Landis, one of "rapidly rising markets, expanding volume and an apparently insatiable demand for capital issues."

Among the better informed on the consequences of such omens "apprehension over the trend has been aroused," to quote Landis again. And, as he well said, the people of this country are strongly resolved that "1929 shall not recur." The pressure for putting on brakes is inspired not only by what is happening in the security markets. It comes also from the rising cost of living, by far the most impelling motive for the Administration to reverse its direction. Unless President Roosevelt successfully can cope with that problem, it will become his Waterloo.

Our British friends last winter and the previous winter expressed an inability to understand why we let constitutional objections stand in the way of the more abundant life and proudly explained the superiority of their system. But hasn't there been something in the newspapers in the last few days about a constitutional crisis in England?

Landis Assails 'Selfish' Foes Of Public Good

Bankers Urged to Assume Active Role to Assist National Recovery.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Augusta, Ga., Dec. 4.—Finance can justify itself to the Nation by responding to the "national desire to move closer to an ideal of industrial and financial security" as reflected in the "mandate of November third," said Securities and Exchange Chairman James M. Landis here today.

Landis, addressing the twenty-fifth annual convention of the Investment Bankers of America, whose members came hoping to hear whether the Administration will go to the left or the right in administering recovery, forestalled the unspoken question by insisting that finance and industry must bear a proportionate share of this responsibility to the public.

His address was featured by a savage attack on the "handful of men" in the utilities industry "who had no vision but that of the past, and of men whose political hatred for the direction of American life made them believe that through some abracadabra of legal learning they could turn it backward."

Inaction Assailed.

He said:

"Where yesterday we saw the tragedies of irresponsible action, today we are face to face with the tragedies of selfish and irresponsible inaction.

"In this contest of power between a handful of men and a nation, no longer lethargic but vocal and tense, there can be no question of the final outcome . . . The unnecessary cost and what may be unwonted delay in a recovery now overdue, is chargeable elsewhere than to government.

"Administration in this field has thus been partly driven into stagnancy, forced to take up the gauntlet of a legalistic challenge, but still hopeful that a recognition of the demands of the new recovery will become plain to a handful of men, and hopeful that from such a recognition will spring the program of expansion, readjustment and employment that already a year ago should have been in the doing."

Demands Bankers' Aid.

Landis handed back to the bankers the problem of the direction of the administration of recovery—whether left or right, saying:

"Where you and others ask that question of government, government seems to me to be asking the same question of you . . . How are you going to interpret the mandate of 27,000,000 people? . . . The interpretation of these desires for finance is thus primarily with the industry itself and only secondarily that of government."

Stressing that the SEC was formed as evidence of "the public resolution that 1929 shall not recur," he pictured the process of the past three years as one in which "law has been carefully built upon law to the end that finance shall not be a game of magic to mystify, bewilder and mislead the investing public, but a forthright business deriving honest business profits from open dealings with the customers who come to its counters in good faith, glad to pay a fair commission for a fair service performed."

Changes Cited.

Landis described a gradual change in attitude by the bankers from the "tearful protestations" of the emergency period and "the current tendency of these same individuals to cut corners" today.

He gave but few hints of the SEC's actual program for the immediate future, but drove again and again on his theme that recovery must not follow the traditional patterns of boom and crash, concluding finally that the "real concern should be with the causes that place strains and stresses . . . upon the financial mechanism," and that "effort must be directed toward closing the investment machinery to the play of irresponsible forces of such a character."

Passing to direct analysis of the holding company field, Landis said: "Maintenance and construction budgets were curtailed in the years of depression. Meanwhile, invention and education in the uses of electric power made for an increasing demand. Surplus capacity is in many cases on the point of exhaustion. Every indication points toward the need for expansion and the concomitant employment of both men and capital.

Inaction Criticized.

"The direction of business administration for recovery should plainly be that of courage to assume responsibilities for fulfilling the growing needs of communities."

After criticising the delay and inaction toward expansion in this field, he concluded with the statement that the success of the administration of the "new recovery" can rest only upon "a recognition of the need for continuing industrial and financial reorientation—practical in attainment, true, but always idealistic in direction.

"You cannot forget that the last recovery was your recovery and that it almost destroyed you. Fairly or unfairly, you became the scapegoats of a bewildered and discouraged people.

"This new recovery . . . will also be your recovery. . . . If the mandate of last November means to us that we must not fail, more clearly does it mean to you that you dare not fail."

Eight hundred of the Nation's leading investment bankers attended the session addressed by the former Harvard law professor, who told reporters after the meeting that the SEC will submit next week to the New York Stock Exchange concrete suggestions for carrying out a broker-dealer segregation on the security exchanges' floors.

Hong Kong-Manila Flights Begin Soon

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—J. T. Trippe, president of Pan-American Airways, tonight announced that regular passenger service between Manila and Hongkong would be started in the near future, completing the company's route from California to China.

Scheduled flights were started recently between California and Manila, with stops at Honolulu, Midway and Wake Islands and Guam.

Trippe, returning from a 36,486-mile flight around the world, during which he studied aviation developments in 19 different countries, said the transpacific service probably would be extended to Hongkong sometime after January 1. The final lap is 720 miles.

Connections at Hongkong will include the Imperial Airways System operated by Great Britain and the Chinese National Air Co., operated in China by Pan-American.

Trippe, returned across the South Atlantic in the dirigible Hindenburg and then flew North in Pan-American Clipper ships.

Wilbert Robinson's Widow Dies in West

Chicago, Dec. 4 (AP).—Mrs. Wilbert "Ma" Robinson, of Baltimore, Md., widow of Wilbert Robinson, former president and manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers Baseball Club, died here early today.

Death was attributed by physicians to a paralytic stroke. She died in the hotel apartment of a niece, Miss Mary Ann Healy, whom she had been visiting for the past five weeks. Hotel attaches said Mrs. Robinson was stricken Wednesday.

Accompanied by Miss Healy and Mrs. Robinson's daughter, Mrs. Frank H. Gunther, of Spring Lake, N. J., the body was placed aboard a Pennsylvania train tonight for Baltimore, where services will be held Monday.

Mrs. Gunther came to Chicago yesterday to be with her mother, a son, Harry L. Robinson, of Baltimore, also survives.

'List Your Aliases In Pension Claim,' Security Unit Says

Persons who are working under assumed names must sign the assumed names to their applications for account numbers under the social security old-age pension system, the Bureau of Internal Revenue ruled yesterday.

However, employes who have concealed their correct names or ages from their employers are expected to give the correct names or ages on slips attached to the applications. Age claims will be investigated before pensions are paid.

The close of business today is the deadline for filing applications for account numbers.

Fund Revealed Still Available For WPA's Use

87-Million 'Backlog' Found by Treasury May Tide Work Through Crisis.

By the Associated Press.

Existence of a "backlog" of unallocated work relief funds, which might be used to carry WPA activities well into February if the new Congress is slow in voting additional money, was disclosed yesterday by Treasury officials.

The revelation came as WPA officials went ahead with plans to curtail pay rolls and make the fast vanishing $272,000,000 now on hand last as long as possible. They have estimated this would be exhausted by January 20, if Congress forced liquidation of the organization by that date.

In addition to the sum at present available to WPA, the Treasury officials said, $87,000,000 of the current works progress appropriation still is unallocated at any agency.

Officials Doubt Move.

President Roosevelt might turn this over to WPA if necessary, although works officials insisted they were counting on no such windfall because some or all of this money might be allocated elsewhere.

Yesterday's developments closely followed an unsuccessful effort by the United States conference of mayors to persuade officials here not to curtail work relief at this time. The mayors since have appealed by cable to President Roosevelt, returning home from the All-American peace conference in South America.

WPA has issued a general economy order which it hopes will result in removal of approximately 425,000 persons from its rolls.

Quotas have not been established by districts, and projects are not to be abandoned, officials said.

New Projects Banned.

On the contrary, they added, new projects are being approved if they can be completed by January 20 and supplemental allotments are being made where funds are exhausted.

The officials asserted no one in actual need would be removed from the roils.

They said the economies are to be effected by:

1. Transfer of 250,000 drought victims to the rural rehabilitation division of the Resettlement Administration, whose grants to such persons average about half the amount of the WPA's drought relief wages;

2. A general combing of the rolls which WPA officials say they hope will remove about 150,000 employes who have other sources of income;

3. Dismissal of 20,000 nonrelief workers and 5,000 administrative employes.

Sergeant Found Slain.

Fort Bragg, N. C., Dec. 4 (AP).—Sergt. Samuel Fazey, 47, a veteran of 20 years' service in the U. S. Army, was found dead with a pistol wound through his head today in the operations office of the air field here. A pistol was found nearby. Fazey, a native of England, was a member of the Second Balloon Squadron. An inquiry was ordered.

Midland Strike Settled; 5 Auto Plants Reopen

1,800 Steel Workers Back on Jobs, 72,000 Motor Employes Can Work.

By the Associated Press.

One of the Nation's major strikes ended yesterday, but deadlocks persisted in two others.

Settlement of a strike of 1,800 workers at the Midland Steel Products Co. in Detroit released a brake on automobile production in that motor capital. Terms of the peace pact included upward wage adjustments, a 45-hour week and abolition of the piece-work system.

The week-long suspension of activities had resulted in the temporary closing of four divisions of the Chrysler Corporation and the Lincoln-Zephyr division of the Ford Motor Co. because of a shortage of steel body frames.

One authoritative source gauged the curtailment at approximately 5,000 units in the daily assembly volume at the motor car plants, while President Homer Martin of the United Automobile Workers of America estimated 72,000 persons were made idle during the stalemate.

True Is Offered.

G. W. McCaoe, head of the Federation of Flat Glass Workers, offered to order 1,300 members participating in a "sit down" demonstration at the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. in Ottawa, Ill., to resume work if officials of the firm would assure him the Ottawans would not be forced to turn out orders for the Chrysler Motor Co.

The Ottawa employes have idled at their benches for three days. They claimed the $4,000,000 Chrysler order was sent there from the Pittsburgh Glass Co. to defeat the strike of 6,000 Pittsburgh plate workers who walked out six weeks ago.

No move to end the Pittsburgh plate controversy was essayed.

Peace negotiations in the West Coast maritime labor dispute came to another halt when coastwise shipping failed to meet radio telegraphers' union spokesmen at San Francisco. Hopes for a settlement of a separate strike of seamen and ships officers on the Gulf Coast also waned when deck and engineering officers elected to enter no agreement with employers until the employers reached an understanding with seamen. A man was shot on the Houston (Tex.) waterfront.

On the other hand, a settlement was indicated in the controversy involving New York longshoremen.

At Watertown, S. Dak., 250 farmers gathered at a mass meeting called to protest their removal from WPA rolls.

At New York, 125 striking WPA workers who took possession of a Federal project office Thursday after hearing reports of a reduction in WPA employment ended their demonstration.

The Kewaneer Manufacturing Co. closed its Niles, Mich., plant after an undetermined number of its 600 hands walked out.

all problems of internal order and of all international conflicts and will justly solve all social and economic antagonisms which cause unrest in the world at present."

He urged the conference "prepare solid bases for a new commercial and economic policy to develop our countries among themselves," in addition to fortifying the peace structure.

Mrs. Burton T. Musser, of Salt Lake City, a United States representative at the parley, presided over the special session which received the peace petition from the People's Mandate Committee to End War.

Mrs. Caroline O'Day, Democratic Representative from New York, presented the document.

Members of the United States delegation were chosen to committees as follows:

Neutrality—Alexander W. Weddell, United States Ambassador to Argentina; Mrs. Musser, Welles and Fenwick.

Arms limitation — Michael F. Doyle, Philadelphia lawyer; Alexander F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Engineers; Weddell and Mrs. Musser.

Juridical—Fenwick, Berle and Doyle.

Intellectual co-operation — Weddell, Mrs. Musser and Whitney.

Francisco Castillo Najero, Mexican ambassador to Washington, was elected chairman of the committee on organization of peace, by a vote of 19 to 1 over Chilean Foreign Minister Miguel Cruchaga.

Alberto Ulloa, former foreign minister of Peru, was chosen head of the neutrality committee. He received 16 votes, while a Colombian, Lopez Pumarejo, and a Uruguayan, Pedro Manini Rios, obtained two each.

Welles was unanimously elected chairman of the committee on economic problems, in which it was expected Secretary Hull's program of reciprocal trade treaties will be pushed.

Leadership of the committee for limitation of armaments went to Luis Barros Borgono, Chilean ambassador to Argentina, who was given 13 votes while other ballots were divided among several nominees.

answer for the dilemma, the woman whose friendship caused the empire crisis, spent the night in southern France en route to a secret hideaway.

Mrs. Simpson, who friends said consented to leave England only at Edward's assurance he would not abdicate the throne of his forefathers, registered under the name of Harrison in Blois early today.

Hotel clerks said she and her party, including a secretary and a bodyguard, would leave at dawn—for the Riviera villa of one of her friends. This may be either Mr. and Mrs. Herman Rogers, of New York, or Sir Charles and Lady Mendl.

Dominions' Views Cited.

Adding to the weight of empire on the shoulders of the slim monarch last night was the pressure brought to bear by representatives of his realm.

It was learned Baldwin, while closeted with Edward in Belvedere for their third session in as many days and their fourth of the week, pointedly told him he must remember that under the statute of Westminster, he was King of each dominion as well as King and Emperor of the British Empire.

The source for this disclosure said further that Baldwin's statement in Commons "reduced the issue to a clear cut one" with next move up to Edward himself.

When the King's final decision would be made known was as uncertain as what it would be.

The fact that Baldwin called a cabinet session for Saturday and that he summoned Viscount Craigavon, Premier of Northern Ireland, from Belfast to London, indicated the King had not determined on what he must do.

But for the crowds jostling through London's streets all night there was only one answer:

"God save the King! God save the new Queen!"

Baldwin Is Firm.

Earlier in the day, while the empire and the world at large hung on every syllable, Baldwin in unmistakable language warned the King, in effect, to exert his will over that of his government and his dominions if he wished—but to sacrifice the throne of his forefathers as the price.

The tight-lipped prime minister served notice to the world he is as irrevocably determined as ever to force the willful sovereign to choose between his right to marry as he wished and his right to retain the scepter of the British Empire.

Anxious subjects, torn between loyalty to their King and respect for his government, had hoped Baldwin's speech would leave some clear way out of the crisis.

All such hopes were dashed by the plain phrases in which the stern prime minister couched his ultimatum.

Any so-called morganatic marriage by which Mrs. Simpson might become the King's legal wife but not his Queen is out of the question, Baldwin said.

British law, he pointed out, made no provision for such an alliance.

Mrs. Simpson Secluded.

The two principals in the amazing modern enactment of the love against an empire theme were miles apart today while the forces of a kingdom were being brought to bear on the determination of a young monarch to marry according to dictates of his own heart and conscience without interference from anybody.

Mrs. Simpson, carefully and at times pugnaciously shielded from the curious, was resting at Blois. She may go to a secret hideaway until the King should make his decision for her or the throne, or should work out a way to keep both—an eventuality that seemed doomed to frustration tonight.

Edward, weary and sore of heart after his third day of struggling against the tide of empire, sought refuge in his secluded country lodge at Fort Belvedere—where Mrs. Simpson stood side by side with him throughout the ordeal of Thursday, fleeing only upon Edward's insistence, friends said.

There was no word forthcoming from the heavily guarded retreat of how the King reacted to Baldwin's flatly clear ultimatum—official verification of what Baldwin was generally believed to have told Edward in three stormy sessions this week.

Holds Compromise Impossible

After an earlier refusal to answer questions on the crisis from the floor, to which he repeated his reply of the day before that he "had no statement to make," Baldwin late in the afternoon finally arose again and solemnly intoned his realization of "the advisability of making a statement."

Frequent cheers greeted the prime minister's clipped sentences of assurance that he and his ministers are determined to force the King's hand.

His words were uttered after repeated efforts from the floor sought public explanation of Baldwin's private views.

Baldwin's assurance his government was not prepared to introduce legislation permitting a morganatic marriage for the King under present circumstances was greeted with loud and prolonged cheers, clear indication of the majority sentiment among the members.

Clement R. Attlee, Laborite leader, played the role he had taken the day before and formally sought to draw out the prime minister in delicately phrased questions.

Heavily, Baldwin arose to each attempt to say he "had nothing to add" to previous responses that he "had no statement."

Those regarded as stanch champions of the monarch in the crisis were left without an opportunity to speak their views because of the suddenness with which the session was adjourned after Baldwin's remarks.

Included among those thought to be aligned on the side of the King were Col. Josiah Wedgwood and Winston Churchill, generally mentioned as the statesman on whom Edward would first call to form a new cabinet should Baldwin and his ministers resign.

Baldwin's Face Drawn.

Baldwin throughout the dark day plainly evidenced the strain he had been under since he took the leadership of those bitterly opposed to any match between Edward and the former Baltimore woman.

His face drawn and heavy, he frequently leaned far forward in his zeal, his coat drooping over his red dispatch case.

The events of the day, bursting upon a British populace kept in ignorance of the crisis by weeks of voluntary press censorship, definitely laid the next move at Edward's door.

Baldwin had spoken as he said for his government and the dominions. The picture he painted was one of gloom for Edward should he cleave to Mrs. Simpson.

Mrs. Simpson gone—at the insistence of the King, friends said—her lavish Cumberland Terrace home, in which she and Edward spent so many gay hours, was occupied only by servants and her "Aunt Bessie," Mrs. D. B. Merryman, of Washington, D. C.

Four trunks and several other pieces of luggage labeled "Miss Burke" were placed aboard a channel boat this afternoon to be sent to Mrs. Simpson wherever she might be.

Friends said they believed Mrs. Simpson would be joined in her retreat by her "Aunt Bessie," who came to her side when her niece began to feel the blows of censure which followed her divorce from Ernest A. Simpson.

All indications were Baldwin's challenge to Edward had been thrown down with the full consent of his ministers with whom he had been in session after each development in the past three days.

Efforts to persuade Baldwin to steer a careful middle course and avoid a greater loss of the Crown's prestige than had already been caused were understood to have been made by at least two ministers. They were Home Secretary Sir John Simon and Alfred Duff Cooper, secretary of state for war.

The royal family, meanwhile, kept its counsel with no outward indication of how Queen Mary and the King's brother regarded the situation.

Highest authorities declared as absurd reports that the Duke of York, next in line of succession, would leave the country.

Another report that Queen Mary had retired to more than customary seclusion was likewise termed untrue.

Queen Mary, it was said, always had been "in seclusion" as far as Mrs. Simpson was concerned.

Radiophotos: London Gets First News of Mrs. Simpson

News vendors in London and other cities of the British Isles displayed prominent signs hawking news of the constitutional crisis the empire faces as a result of King Edward's friendship for Mrs. Simpson.

Lady Mendl, wife of Sir Charles Mendl, at whose villa near Versailles, France, it is thought Mrs. Wallis Simpson will be guest. Lady Mendl, the former Elsie de Wolfe, was for many years a member of the Empire Theater Stock Co. She is a warm friend of Miss Anne Morgan, of the banking family.

Australian Parliament Called in Simpson Case

Canberra, Australia, Saturday, Dec. 5 (U.P.).—Prime Minister Joseph A. Lyons today summoned Parliament to meet Wednesday, presumably to discuss the British constitutional crisis and the stand Australia will take in event the dominion is required to vote on the question of King Edward's abdication.

'All-for-Love' Romances Dot Royal History

From Cleopatra to King Carol, Many Instances Found in Past.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 4.—England's King Edward VIII will be following an old royal custom if he gives up his throne for the friendship of Mrs. Wallis Simpson.

Rulers have abdicated to keep the favor of women ever since monarchies began.

A famous example involved Cleopatra. Antony lost his place in the Third Triumvirate of Rome due to that affair.

The practice has not changed much with time. A few years ago King Carol of Rumania was given the same choice that England's King now faces.

As crown prince, Carol married morganatically a commoner, Zizi Lambrino, and they had a son. The nation's hostility to the match forced him to abdicate. Later, he divorced her, married Princess Helen of Greece, and assumed the Rumanian throne. Lately his subjects have complained about his red-haired friend, Mme. Lupescu.

The late King Manuel II of Portugal was a gay blade. He had a weakness for dancers—a Gypsy in Paris, a Russian ballerina and a Parisian actress, Gaby Deslys, all claimed his attention. His subjects didn't like it. In 1908 he heard guns outside the palace and was told he'd better leave. He never went back.

The same sort of thing was happening in the English line of kings 1,000 years ago. King Edwy the Fair, who reigned from 955 to 959, married a cousin, Ethelgiva, without benefit of clergy, a year before he took the throne. When he refused to give her up, the clergy, led by the famous St. Dunstan, seized her, burned her face with red-hot irons and banished her to Ireland, where she died of torture at the age of 18. Then they forced Edwy to abdicate and replaced him with his younger brother, Edgar.

Henry II, who sat on the throne from 1154 to 1189, quit suddenly after quite a bit of trouble between his wife, Queen Eleanore, and his girl friend, Joan Clifford, the "Fair Rosamond," all the poets wrote about later.

King John (Lackland), who signed the Magna Charta in his rule from 1199 to 1216, did not pause to consider the effect when he divorced his first wife and seized a second. Pope Innocent III excommunicated him. In those days, excommunicated persons just weren't kings.

Edward II was forced to quit after reigning from 1307 to 1327. His wife, Queen Isabella of France, was bored with him. She had him murdered later to make sure of domestic peace.

The usual formula was reversed by brave Margaret of Anjou, queen of Henry VI. When he abdicated in face of the forces of Joan of Arc, Margaret raised an army and put the crown back on his head. But it was no use. Henry had to abdicate all over again.

His father's women friends caused trouble for Edwrd V. He abdicated because of claims he was an illegitimate child.

William of Orange reached the English throne in 1688 at the invitation of the British people, who forced out James II after he married a Catholic, Mary Beatrice. William and his queen, Mary, were both Protestants.

Irene, Empress of the East, put her son, Constantine VI, to death in 788 in order to marry Charlemagne, the Emperor of the West. But her subjects opposed the match, and she had to abdicate.

Robert II, who ruled France from 996 to 1031, was threatened with excommunication unless he divorced his wife, a cousin, Bertha. He did what the Pope said, and saved his crown.

The Count of Castile tried to force abdication of King Ordono III, of Spain. Ordono got even by divorcing the count's daughter.

The good Queen Christina, of Sweden, was strangely similar and yet a strange contrast to England's Edward VIII. Like him, she was loved by her subjects. As he did while he was Prince of Wales, she refused her subjects' entreaties that she marry but instead of acquiring a friend, as King Edward has, she abdicated to get away from marriage and died an eccentric old maid.

Mrs. Simpson Flees to France; Phones King Across Channel

containing two French-speaking British detectives.

There were no official announcements of any kind concerning the destination of the American-born divorcee.

From scattered bits of information, the curious picked her route through the dusty byways of southern France.

Her car was reported to have passed through Orleans at 6 p. m.

At the time the automobile took the road to Blois.

Persons in Chartres said they saw her car driven through their city, southbound, along the route to the Rhone Valley and the Riviera.

Those who said they saw Mrs. Simpson from not too great a distance said she appeared to be in radiant health, with no apparent indications that she had recently been ill, as some London reports said.

Her chic figure was smartly turned out in a rust-brown traveling suit. The sedan in which she rode was dark blue of American make, similar in accoutrements to cars in Edward's royal garages.

Immediately after arriving in Rouen, Mrs. Simpson and her party repaired to the Hotel de la Poste to freshen up after the channel crossing.

They remained inside for some time after the manager said he had received a telephone call from the British Embassy in Paris that the guests would not be required to register.

An actress and another bystander were knocked aside and their cameras smashed by the bodyguard as they attempted to photograph Mrs. Simpson walking from the hotel to her car.

Some persons thought the Versailles villa of Lady Mendl, wife of the press attache of the British Embassy, might be the eventual destination of Mrs. Simpson. Caretakers said nobody was home, but great activity was noticed around and in the villa, where laborers have worked for the last few days.

Another probable hideaway for the fleeing woman was suggested as the villa of Lou Viei at Cannes, which belongs to Herman Rogers and his socially prominent wife, of New York.

Lady Mendl, wife of Sir Charles Mendl, at whose Versailles villa Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson may seek sanctuary, is one of England's most gracious hostesses.

Lady Mendl, the former Elsie de Wolfe, was for many years a member of the famous Empire Theater stock company with John Drew, Maude Adams, Sir Guy Standing and Margaret Illington. Later she managed her own company.

In 1926 Lady Mendl married Sir Charles, at present press attache at the British Embassy in Paris. For many years Lady Mendl had been a close friend of Miss Anne Morgan, a sister of J. P. Morgan.

York Is Believed Preparing to Ascend the Throne

Aide to Duke Sees Baldwin, Queen Mother

Two Daughters of King's Brother Are Cheered During Auto Ride.

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 4.—The shy, slender Duke of York, who some think will be King of England before the week is out, tonight was believed by many to have spent the day in preparation for the possible new dignity.

They read this "preparation" into visits of his private secretary, Sir Eric Mieville, first to 10 Downing street to see Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin before the latter spoke in the House of Commons, and to Queen Mary.

Many said they considered it obvious King Edward's less colorful younger brother would not stand back if he were called to the throne.

Commoner But Unwed.

The Duke's wife, the former Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon, was a commoner, like Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson, but there was a different reception in the country and empire to the duke's romance than to King Edward's.

The duchess had not been married previously when the duke led her to the altar; she was Scottish born. Though she was a commoner, she came of aristocratic stock.

Golden-haired Princess Elizabeth, next after her father in the succession to the throne, and her sister, Princess Margaret Rose, went for their usual automobile ride this afternoon.

Children Cheered.

A crowd which spotted them sent up cheers for the two little girls, one of whom is 10 and the other 6 years old.

Attention has been focused on the duke for weeks as, until yesterday, the British newspapers refrained from publishing anything directly on "l-affaire Simpson."

During the silence on the case of Mrs. Simpson, the press carried special articles extolling the industry of the Duke of York and his blameless life.

Bishop Cannot Forbid King to Wed, He Says

Sheffield, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—The Bishop of Bradford, whose recent speech caused the "constitutional crisis" over Mrs. Wallis Simpson, told an audience tonight that while he did not sanction the marriage of divorced persons, he could not forbid it.

He did not say whether such power might be exerted over the King and Mrs. Simpson by a prelate higher in the Church of England than himself.

Power to Stop Royal Wedding Rests With Divorce Proctor

Refusal of Decree to Mrs. Simpson Could Block Nuptials.

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 4.—The one man in the world who can solve the constitutional crisis between King Edward VIII and Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin—and solve it with the single word, "No!"—faced a history-making decision tonight.

Others may argue, pro and con. The British Parliament may storm at Edward and demand the throne as the price of his defiance of constitutional law.

Edward, stung to desperate measures by "mere political" challenging of his "divine right of kings," may dissolve that Parliament—or abdicate.

But only one man, neither cabinet minister nor politician, can end the chaotic conflict—temporarily at least—with a single stroke.

"Most Unpopular Job."

He is the King's own proctor, Sir Thomas Barnes, holder of what has sometimes been called "the most unpopular job in England."

By the simple expedient of refusing to grant Mrs. Wallis Simpson her final decree of divorce, Sir Thomas—armed with the full authority to take such a step—could stamp a legal "finis" to the dispute which has rocked the British Empire to its foundations.

While King and cabinet may fight to the last ditch over Edward's decision to marry the one-time Baltimore belle, Sir Thomas has the power in his role as King's proctor to snatch the "causus belli" from the conflict merely by removing the lady herself from the legally eligible matrimonial list.

Two Courses Possible.

For Sir Thomas, according to high legal authorities, might rule that the present furore arising from Mrs. Simpson's friendship with King Edward offers sufficient proof of two things:

1. Defiance of the office of King's proctor, which is designated by British law to watch the conduct of Mrs. Simpson during the six months interim period between the granting of her decree nisi and the final decree, next April 27.

2. Evidence of possible "collusion" between Mrs. Simpson and her husband, Ernest Aldrich Simpson, in obtaining the decree nisi of divorce through an "amicable arrangement" to permit Mrs. Simpson to gain her freedom for marriage with King Edward.

Sir Thomas, who draws $12,500 annually for making British divorcees toe the line, makes about 60 such interventions each year, and in about one-third of these cases of rejection the court upholds him and refuses to grant the requisite final papers leading to marital freedom.

Working Class Supports King In Controversy

Crowds Shout for Monarch in London, Parade Through Streets.

peatedly, above the tumult, came the cry:

They sang "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow!" and clamored, "Make Baldwin stop!"

Police turned back a band of white-collar city workers who started for Buckingham Palace singing the national anthem and carrying banners inscribed, "God Save the King!"

Detoured from Buckingham, the band marched on to Hyde Park and quickly gathered a crowd. Once more, reinforced now, they started on a new route along Oxford street toward the palace, but again police turned them back.

From another direction, however, a crowd of 300 paraded past Buckingham Palace with a banner demanding:

"After South Wales, you cannot let him down! Come to the palace now. Cheer the King!"

Men tossed their hats in the air. They stayed only briefly. Police "urged" them along.

Gen. Denhardt Seeks Release From Jail

Edward Can Seize Absolute Control Easily—in Theory

London, Dec. 4 (AP).—Under powers invested in him by the British constitution, Edward VIII tonight could become as powerful a dictator as Mussolini, Hitler or Stalin.

Though commonly regarded as at the "mercy" of his parliament, the beleaguered monarch could, theoretically if not actually:

1. Disband Parliament, refuse to allow it to meet again, prevent any of its bills from becoming law.
2. Declare war on any country, or make peace.
3. Disband all of Britain's armed forces—army, navy and air force. They belong to him.
4. Overrule the highest court in the land, and pardon all criminals.
5. Make a peer of peeress out of every citizen of the British empire.
6. Dismiss the cabinet and call on the army—all sworn to serve him personally, not the empire or state—to enforce his royal commands at sword-point.

Second North Carolina Home Offered to King

Danville, Va., Dec. 4 (AP).—James H. Wilson, warehouse operator, is more eager now than ever to do something for the King of England.

Yesterday Wilson said he would give the King 5 acres of land and a house in Caswell County, N. C., if he decided to abdicate the throne and "come over here to live with us."

A few hours later, State Senator John Sprunt Hill, of Durham, N. C., said he would give the King and Mrs. Wallis Simpson a house and 50 acres if they would come to North Carolina.

"I'll make it 100 acres," Wilson said today, "and I've got the land to spare. It cost me only $9 an acre."

Two Are Killed, Third Injured As Beam Falls

2-Ton Girder for Viaduct Drops 50 Feet, Crushes D. C. Contractor.

John M. McDonald, 50, of 1845 Lamont street northwest, head of the Federal Steel Erecting Co., a contractor here for 20 years, and an ironworker, Joseph Lloyd Roberts, 54, of 1204 K street northwest, were killed yesterday when a 2-ton steel crossbeam struck them after falling 50 feet from the new Benning Viaduct under construction at Benning and Kenilworth avenues northeast.

McDonald was killed instantly by the beam when he tripped and fell while trying to escape. Roberts died in Casualty Hospital several hours later.

A third ironworker, Cornelius Hanley, 49, of 323 East Capitol street, is in Emergency Hospital suffering from a possible fracture of the back. His condition is critical.

The two men who were riding the huge beam as it was about to be placed into position escaped injury by clinging to the crane wires when the girder fell carrying small beams with it. They are George Decatur, of 469 I street northwest, and Wallis Kirtley, of 523 Eleventh street northwest.

In falling, the beam severed electric wires over two main tracks in the Benning freight yards of the Pennsylvania Railroad, delaying service for several hours.

When the tragedy occurred McDonald was standing with Hanley on the tracks under the bridge directing the crane operations

Roberts, who was standing on the beam, fell clear when it tipped. His shoulder and leg was crushed. He also suffered a fracture of the skull.

McDonald, who saw the beam tipping, attempted to escape but tripped directly under the girder. Hanley leaped aside and was struck a glancing blow in the back. He was taken to Emergency Hospital in a private auto. An ambulance was summoned for Roberts.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald and Acting Engineer Commissioner Patrick H. Tansey went immediately to the scene. Tansey has requested Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, to submit a written report of circumstances surrounding the tragedy.

John H. Claggett, the crane operator, said he believed the bolts on the south end of the girder sheared off as that end fell down first.

McDonald was a native of Canada, but had lived here more than 30 years, coming here from Boston. For many years he was superintendent for the George A. Fuller Co., construction firm, and had charge of erection of the Munsey Building, Raleigh Hotel and other large District buildings.

Since March he has headed the Federal Steel Erecting Co., which he founded. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mary McDonald and three sisters, none of whom are District residents.

Roberts has lived in Washington for the past five years. He was unmarried and resided at the home of J. T. Mooney, foreman of the job, at the K street address.

Hanleys' wife, who has been ill for several days, was not advised immediately of her husband's injuries. A few days ago she told friends she had a dream in which her husband suffered an injury.

Hanley, who has a daughter, Katherine, 14, refused a job—another job, a week ago because it would take him out of town and away from his family. He has worked on several large Government buildings here for the Government and in France during the World War.

Man Confesses Brutal Slaying Of Roommate

Richmond. He showed no signs of wavering in his story. He was not arrested and was a pallbearer at Carter's funeral yesterday. He had three days in which to escape, but did not leave town, apparently because he feared his absence would indicate guilt.

Detectives suspected him of the crime when it was noted that Carter's finger was not crooked around the trigger of the rifle. This fact was thrown at Bolling while he was being grilled in the office of Police Chief S. B. Perry last night.

It unnerved him and he volunteered to tell the whole story. After his confession had been taken down and signed, he led the officers to his quarters and re-enacted the crime.

Collected Weapons.

He then took them to the bridge over the historic Rappahannock and showed them where he had thrown the bowie knife.

Bolling was an amateur collector of weapons and had numerous rifles and guns, old and new, in his flat. Police made no attempt to recover the knife. They will not drag the river.

The .22 rifle has ben sent to ballistic experts along with the bullet, for examination.

Bolling had known Carter most of his life. Carter had worked in the Bolling paint store at various times but recently had been unemployed and relied on his rich friend to support him.

Both were interested in military affairs and were members of Battery F, Virginia National Guard. They had attended a drill of the unit Monday night and then returned to their apartment, after first visiting at the home of Sergt. H. D. McGraw, next door, also a member of the guard.

Later Bolling became suspicious that his friend Carter was going to reveal the story of his illicit love affair. He said nothing to Carter at the time, but as soon as he got Carter alone he killed him, he told police.

Carter, he said, had been threatening to disclose his secret for some time. Carter's motive in threatening him was that Carter, too, was interested in the same woman and was jealous. He had, Bolling said, threatened to disclose the whole affair to the woman's husband.

The two men were close friends. It is believed they never quarreled until the matter of Carter's knowledge of Bolling's relationship with the woman came between them.

On Monday, Prosecutor Cole said, Bolling learned that Carter had had a private conversation with the woman's husband. He feared that Carter had told him his secret. It subsequently developed that Carter had not disclosed the secret to the husband.

Until the murder, Bolling had led a life of ease from income from his investments. He had never been arrested before and never been in any trouble, so far as local authorities know.

Carter is survived by his mother, four brothers and two sisters, all of Fredericksburg.

Bolling will be charged with first-degree murder, Prosecutor Cole said late today. A special grand jury is to be convened shortly for the purpose of indicting him.

Woman Questioned.

The woman mentioned in Bolling's confession was interviewed today. She stated that Bolling and Carter had been acquaintances of hers, but that she knew nothing of the murder.

This woman was questioned numerous other clews besides the fact the course of their three-day investigation. Her husband also was brought in for questioning. Numerous other clues besides the fact the dead man's finger was not crooked around the trigger were compiled for the trial by police.

Blood spots were said to have been found outside the bath tub and the absence of the knife which supposedly was used in the "suicide" also convinced officers that Carter was murdered.

Bolling graduated from Augusta Military Academny, noted boys' school, with honors. He later became a lieutenant in the National Guard, but resigned that position, subsequently rejoining with the rank of sergeant.

Carter was a private in the outfit. His family came here from Ohio many years ago.

Fire Captain Kills Taunter and Self Over Secret Band

Pontiac, Mich., Dec. 4 (AP).—Taunts of Black Legion membership, acting Chief of Police Frank Nelson said tonight, led Fire Capt. William H. Bradburn to kill a fellow fireman and commit suicide today.

The bodies of Bradburn, named by a grand jury recently as a member of the society of hooded night-riders, and of Donld H. Slugher were found in the kitchen of the fire station Bradburn commanded.

On the captain's desk was a note to Fire Chief Frank W. Kuhn, which said: "He talked too much. He should have been changed."

Nelson said he was told Slugher, whose name was not linked with the Black Legion by the grand jury which listed 19 Pontiac police and firemen as members, had directed many jibes at the fire captain. Nelson expressed belief Bradburn brooded over the taunts and the possibility of dismissal.

Chief Kuhn said Capt. Bradburn told him that he attended only one Black Legion meeting and had refused to join when he learned the nature of the organization.

Announcers Vie For 'Big Role' In Post Show

McDonald and Godfrey—One or the Other—to Do 'Dying Swan.'

teners. The loser—and McDonald seemed to have no doubt in his mind as to which one of them that would be—must contribute $5 to the fund, and, in addition, perform his interpretation of the famous "Dance of the Dying Swan," in ballet costume, for the entertainment of the youngsters at the Capitol's special show next Saturday morning.

"Maybe this guy Godfrey can ride a horse," said McDonald last night, "although I'm not entirely sure of that. But, believe me, I can hardly wait to see him do that 'Dying Swan' dance—that is, if he's not afraid to accept my challenge."

A Post reporter, after the McDonald broadcast, located Godfrey at his farm near Falls Church to tell him of the challenge.

"Accept it?" said Godfrey. "You tell McDonald to listen in on my 'Sun Dial' program in the morning, if he wants to know whether I'll accept his challenge or not. And, say, do you see that cow over there trying to swish a fly off her back with her tail? Not very graceful, is she? Well, she's the most graceful thing in the world—compared to what McDonald is going to look like on the stage of the Capitol next Saturday morning. And am I going to be laughing!"

So, apparently the battle is on. The vote will be checked Friday night and the loser of the wager informed just before the curtain goes up for the special children's performance Saturday morning, December 12.

In addition to the "Dying Swan Dance," the entertainment will include a Laurel and Hardy short feature, "Tit for Tat;" an Our Gang comedy, "Pinch Singer;" a Mickey Mouse short, featuring Donald Duck; a Pop-Eye comedy cartoon, and singing and dancing acts from Dave Apollon's 1937 All-Star Parade.

Admission to the show, with doors opening at 9 a. m. and the performance starting at 9:30, will be one new toy or doll for The Post's 1936 Toy and Doll Fund. Adults, accompanying children to the show, will be admitted on the same basis, plus any cash contribution they may care to make to The Fund.

Meanwhile, contributions continue to come to The Post's Toy and Doll Fund headquarters. But thousands of toys and dolls are needed if every boy and girl in the District is to have a happy Christmas. Toys and dolls may be left at any Peoples Drug Store, where collection boxes have been placed; at the boxes in the lobbies of the Palace, Columbia or Capitol theaters; or, on the first floor of The Post Building, 1337 E street northwest. If it is inconvenient to deliver your contribution in person, call a Terminal Taxicab, DEcatur 5130, and a cab will call at your address.

All cash contributions—and any amount, from a penny up will help to make Christmas for some underprivileged Washington youngster—should be brought or mailed directly to The Toy and Doll Fund, in care of The Washington Post.

The Catholic attitude toward the Spanish revolution will form the basis of the afternoon discussions, at which the guest speaker will be the Rev. Francis P. LeBuffe, S. J., of New York, who is associate editor of America and eastern organizer of sodalities. Father LeBuffe will speak on "A Lesson From Spain."

The morning session will open with an invocation by the Rev. John E. Grattan, S. J., dean of Georgetown College, and an address of welcome by John C. Donnelly, resident prefect of the Hilltop Sodality. In the afternoon the delegates will attend a solemn benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament in St. William's Chapel at 1:45 p. m. Father LeBuffe will be the celebrant. Samuel E. Agnew, nonresident prefect of the Georgetown Sodality, will give the opening talk in the afternoon. The convention will conclude with a reception in the Copley lounge.

Delegates will attend from Trinity College, Georgetown Preparatory School, Georgetown Visitation Convent, Holy Cross, Immaculata, Notre Dame, Sacred Heart, and St. Paul's academies, Gonzaga, Holy Trinity, and St. Anthony's High schools.

State Department Approves Nuptials

Harris & Ewing.

CHRISTINE BECK-FRIIS, daughter of the former Counselor of the Swedish Legation, whose prospective marriage to Myles Standish, United States vice counsul at Manchester, England, was one of two exceptions to the Presidents' recent order banning marriages of United States foreign service officers to aliens. Their engagement had been announced previous to publication of the Presidential order.

State Department Sanctions Marriage of Two Diplomats

Standish and Seibert Uermitted to Wed Foreigners, Because Arrangements Preceded Ruling of President.

By Sidney Olson.

The genial bachelor who is Acting Secretary of State, R. Walton Moore, yesterday made two exceptions to the President's recent ban on foreign service officers' marriages to aliens.

Secretary Moore announced to the press that he had sanctioned the marriage to foreign women of two American vice consuls, Elvin Seibert, of Elkhart, Ind., stationed at Shanghai, and Myles Standish, of New York, now on duty at Manchester, England.

Seibert and Standish, under the new regulations, had cabled their resignations with the requests for permission to marry. Neither was accepted. Both had made formal announcement of their engagements before the ban was promulgated.

Standish, 27, schooled at New York University and Columbia University, asked permission to marry Miss Betty Walls, of Manchester, an Englishwoman, on December 21 of this year.

Seibert, 35, a graduate of Columbia College, New York, and a graduate student of Columbia University, already had announced his engagement to Miss Christine Beck-Friis, daughter of Baron Beck-Friis, the former counselor of the Swedish legation here in Washington and now serving as charge d'affaires in Shanghai. Baron Beck-Friis was recently named as the new Swedish minister to China. This marriage was scheduled for next May. It was rumored in Washington Thursday by friends of Miss Beck-Friis, who lived here for several years.

Moore told reporters that the department wished to deal fairly with the foreign service officers, and that in his viewpoint, engagements entered into prior to the ban represent legal contracts as well as sentimental contracts.

The debate, the third program of the seven to be given this year by the National Temple Forum, will be held in the temple proper at 8:30 p. m.

Simple Services Held for Ringling

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—In direct contrast to the tinsel and panoply with which his life was surrounded, funeral services for John Ringling were held today in a Broadway funeral parlor before less than 50 friends.

The simple rites of the Lutheran Church were performed for the man who headed the greatest circus organization of the world for many years.

Present were Dexter Fellowes, Ringling's veteran publicity man, Jimmy Johnston, boxing impresario of Madison Square Garden; Bert Cole, of the Coles, and associates of Ringling in his circus enterprises.

The body was taken to Englewood, N. J., for temporary burial pending completion of a burial place in the family plot in Sarasota, Fla.

'Silk-Stocking' Slayer Hanged At San Quentin

Cynical Murderer Made No Defense; Claimed Life Was Wasted.

By the Associated Press.

San Quentin, Calif., Dec. 4.—Cynical Albert Walter, jr., died today as he wished—on San Quentin's gallows for the "silk-stocking" murder of pretty Blanche Cousins, of Idaho Falls, Idaho.

Unfalteringly he climbed the 13 steps to the gibbet, dropped through the trap and was pronounced dead in 10½ minutes.

A Catholic priest accompanied him. He was the 200th man to be hanged here since San Quentin began carrying out death sentences in 1893.

Walter maintained he had crowded the experiences of many ordinary lifetimes into his 29 "wasted" years.

The night of last June 17 he led San Francisco police to an apartment where the half-nude body of Miss Cousins lay on a bed. A silk stocking was knotted about her throat and tied to a bedpost.

Walter said he strangled the girl "half in hate, half in passion," when she resisted his advances.

He made no gesture of defense. His wife, Angela, of New York, and his father, a Boston salesman, came here to help him but he expressed impatience over their solicitude.

"I don't want my wife to get mixed up in this," he said, "but if my father wants to bare the family skeletons, that's his business. I think the whole family is touched in the head, but I am not crazy. I want to be hanged and get it over with."

Walter said he had turned cynical when very young because of an experience with a woman.

Walter met Miss Cousins on a bus between Salt Lake City and San Francisco. The tragedy occurred after they had taken dinner in her apartment.

Divine Group's Noise Annoys a Barrymore

Beverly Hills, Calif., Dec. 4 (AP).—Lionel Barrymore testified today that although he has considerable religious tolerance, he thinks Father Divine's Beverly Hills followers should be more subdued in their meetings.

Barrymore was one of several screen notables who appeared in court as a witness in the case of the peace-loving residents of the city versus the followers of Harlem's religious leader.

The cult has headquarters in the fashionable section of Beverly Hills and those who live nearby complain that the religious fervor of the worshipers is very noisy. The Barrymore home is adjacent to the headquarters.

Death of American In China Investigated

Nanking, Dec. 4 (AP).—The United States Embassy asked the National Government of China today to investigate the fatal shooting of George Hobart Newsome, 40, American tobacco executive, by a Chinese last night.

The embassy appealed also for protection for other Americans in the Hsuchang area. Foreign tobacco buyers have experienced trouble there because of the efforts of native interests to collect percentages on all sales and to prevent direct transactions with farmers.

Ossietzky, Nobel Prize Winner, Too Ill for Trip

Berlin, Dec. 4 (AP).—Attending physicians announced today that Karl von Ossietzky's health would not permit him to go to Oslo, Norway, to receive the 1935 Nobel peace prize.

The German pacifist's condition has grown steadily worse in the last few days, his doctors said.

Ossietzky, released from a Nazi concentration camp only a short time before he was awarded the prize, is a patient in a Berlin tubercular sanitarium.

Election Frauds Cited By St. Louis Grand Jury

St. Louis, Dec. 4 (AP).—A grand jury, which investigated the Missouri primary of last August 4, in St. Louis, reported to Circuit Judge Robert J. Kirkwood today it was "appalled" by "evidence of open and blatant fraud" on the part of election officials.

The jury, which ended its term today, said it found "overwhelming evidence of corruption" in each of the 68 election fraud felony indictments it voted.

3 Killed, 32 Missing In Philippine Typhoon

Manila, Dec. 4 (AP).—Three persons were reported killed by Wednesday's typhoon and property damage in Neuva Ecija Province alone was estimated today by officials at $1,225,000. The reports came in slowly over crippled communication lines.

Thirty-two persons were unaccounted for. Manuel Quezon, Commonwealth president, summoned the National Relief Board into emergency session.

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—Erin O'Brien Moore, stage and screen actress, will be married Sunday to Mark Barron, New York newspaperman.

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—Schiaparelli, the French designer, who came all the way from Paris to do her Christmas shopping, started today on a "spree" in New York's "five-and-tens."

"The idea of spending an afternoon in one of your five-and-tens thrills me beyond measure, and that is just what I'm going to do," she said when she arrived on the liner Europa.

Spouse Sought in Death Of Wife, Stepdaughter

Canton, Ohio, Dec. 4 (AP).—The bodies of Mrs. Minnie Long, 40, and her daughter, Virginia Pyatte, 18, one hacked to death, the other shot through the head, were discovered today in their apartment. Police Chief Ira Manderbaugh described the deaths as double murder, and said he was seeking Sherman Long, Mrs. Long's third husband.

Radio Firms End Advertising Fight

A consent decree in District Court yesterday brought to an end litigation between the Sun Radio Service and Supply Co., and the Metropolitan Radio Co., which occupy adjacent stores on F street, when the latter company agreed to terminate advertising which caused confusion between patrons of the stores.

The Sun Co., through Attorney Lester Cohen, charged the Metropolitan Co. with simulating its signs and displays in such a manner that customers drawn to the Sun Co. by advertising were sometimes mislead by the other firm's displays.

Justice Joseph W. Cox signed a stipulation which calls upon the Metropolitan Co. to cease copying or emulating the descriptive advertising of the Sun Co.

Union Business Agent, 2 Others, Hurt in Fight

Houston, Tex., Dec. 4 (AP).—Wilbur W. Dickey, business agent for the Marine Firemen, Oilers and Water Tenders, and two other men were injured late today in a fight at the rank-and-file striking seamen's headquarters here.

Dickey was taken to a hospital with head and body injuries. A man identified as Johnny Kane was shot and critically wounded, and C. L. Eubank, 36, was severely beaten. Kane was shot in an argument with a man said to be a leader of the I. S. U. seamen.

Thirty policemen held about 300 rank-and file striking seamen at the I. S. U. hall after the riot.

Facts On Installment Selling.

The Federal Trade Commission has lodged complaints against a number of automobile companies and automobile financing companies for alleged false and misleading statements in advertisements relating to sales on the deferred payment basis.

Representatives of some of the companies have quickly retorted that there is no intention to deceive the public and that the only issue is a technical matter of phraseology. However, a technically accurate statement may tend to minimize the actual cost of installment credit to the buyer. If that cost is considerable, the temptation to "dress up" the facts is obvious.

Hence the F. T. C. is justified in demanding that strict standards be applied to test the adequacy of the information given prospective purchasers. For instance, if a 6 per cent charge is added in advance to the listed price of an automobile, and if that sum is repayable in monthly installments, the purchaser should fully understand that the actual interest charge for the period may figure out at double 6 per cent.

That rate may be entirely reasonable in view of the risks of loss, the expense of investigating the credit status of buyers, the cost of collections and other incidental outlays. But in any case, reputable finance companies will be helped rather than harmed by the kind of publicity which exposes the subterfuges by which less reputable concerns sometimes cover excessive carrying charges.

Insistence upon a full, unequivocal statement of pertinent facts serves two purposes. It helps to expose extortion and it enables the buyer to plan his expenditures more wisely.

A vast amount of credit is extended to consumers in one form or another. From the very nature of the transactions the interest charges are high because of the costs of the service to the lender and the risks of loss. Nevertheless, installment selling, like other forms of credit extension, has become an important and indispensable institution in present-day business life. Used intelligently, it benefits buyers and sellers alike. One of the greatest safeguards against abuse of the system is afforded by full publicity as to the character of the transaction to which the installment buyer commits himself.

Behind The Bars.

As a fitting climax to their criminal careers, the three youths who disarmed and captured a Fort Myer sentry are now contemplating their escapades with long faces behind the bars. The "bad men" who terrorized motorists, robbed store keepers and doubtless fancied themselves thoroughly dashing fellows are shown up as quaking amateurs now that they have fallen into the hands of the law. In fact, the "strong man" of the gang wept when he faced a photographer after signing a confession to many crimes.

The cowed attitude of these young desperadoes suggests that their criminal ventures might easily have been nipped in the bud. Their trail of depredations was extensive simply because it is easy for a weakling to intimidate unarmed civilians by a flourish of firearms. It is this which gave an especially ironic turn to the kidnapping episode at Fort Myer.

A number of readers have roundly condemned The Post for the rather tart comment to which this indignity prompted us. As letters on this page have emphasized, a soldier on duty at this particular post can scarcely anticipate that any one of thousands of passing motorists might have designs on him. In an episode such as that which occurred, the sentry is therefore clearly at a great disadvantage to which we should have drawn adequate attention. But if the soldier had been able to defend himself effectively against the gunmen who assailed him it is doubtful that there would have been the civilian outcry which some of our correspondents suggest.

The gangster type is largely recruited from weak and blustering youths who become hardened criminals only as success crowns their early escapades. Rough treatment in the early stages, not excluding the meeting of violence with stern reprisals, is an effective way of restoring a sense of proportion in time.

All law enforcement agencies do well to emphasize discretion as a fundamental obligation. But they should be assured that the society which they protect does not desire them to be unduly restrained in handling those who are clearly public enemies.

What Of The Public Interest?

In retaliation for the refusal of French longshoremen to unload freight from American steamers, the International Longshoremen's Association has refused to remove even perishable cargo brought into the port of New York by the French liner Champlain.

Thus a jurisdictional dispute leading to a split in the International Seamen's Union has not only involved American longshoremen who are not on strike but has assumed international scope, bringing French dock workers into conflict with American dock labor. From Mexican ports, also, comes word of further extension of the difficulties.

Labor disturbances in the shipping industry obviously cannot be localized, even if there were no sympathetic strikes to complicate the situation. Eastern ports have felt the effects of the Pacific Coast strike because of the tie-up of vessels engaged in intercoastal trade. And the fact that American vessels have a monopoly of coastal shipping is forcing both Hawaii and Alaska to confront very serious food shortages. Passenger travel, too, has been impeded by the penalties exacted from foreign vessels carrying passengers between American ports.

In addition to the serious losses and inconveniences occasioned by deprivation of service, the Eastern jurisdictional disputes affecting the seamen's union have caused cancellations or delay in the sailing of American vessels and have diverted a great deal of traffic to foreign lines. The direct and indirect losses to the shipping companies and to shippers have undoubtedly been very heavy, and to some extent are permanent in character. That the situation grows worse rather than better is attested by the scenes of violence and intimidation of crew members preceding the departure of the steamship Manhattan from New York on Wednesday.

The toll that these widespread disturbances have exacted and are continuing to exact from shipping companies, maritime labor, trade, industry and the general public is enormous. It is intolerable that an industry so strongly "affected by a public interest," and so obviously in need of regulatory supervision should be left to struggle with its problems as if they were matters of only local concern, to be settled by a knock-down fight between the labor unions and the employing group most immediately concerned. The French and Mexican boycotts of American vessels may arouse the people of this country to a keener perception of the dangers surrounding a policy of laissez-faire which encourages the spread of sympathetic strikes to regions outside national boundaries, thereby giving foreign labor groups an opportunity to influence the outcome of domestic disputes.

It is evident that the justice of the demands made by the West Coast maritime unions, and the proper method of handling the so-called insurgent members of the seamen's union on the East Coast, cannot be satisfactorily determined in the present bitter atmosphere. Of course, if the present disturbances are prolonged to the point of exhaustion, a temporary truce may be arranged. But a satisfactory settlement of differences requires carefully developed machinery for arbitrating disputes, such as an impartial official board in which both sides have confidence. The shipping industry, like the railway industry, is too necessary to the welfare of the country to permit industrial warfare to disrupt its normal functioning.

Effective collective bargaining not only requires good regulatory machinery but also calls for a responsible attitude on the part of the negotiators. Unfortunately the frequent breaches of contract ascribed to the maritime unions, and the lack of an adequate feeling of responsibility to the public shown by acts of lawless violence, militate seriously against the development of strong unions, able to gain concessions by virtue of their reputation for fair dealing and their willingness to abide by a bargain.

A Forty-Hour Week.

In agreeing to pay one and one-half times the regular rate for all work in excess of 40 hours per week, the General Motors Corporation has in effect accepted 40 hours as the normal working week. And as the automobile industry is now working at a high rate of activity it is anticipated that during the immediate future there will be a good deal of overtime work, and hence a substantial increase in earnings.

By linking this increased pay with overtime, moreover, there will be less pressure upon the company to drop workers when business begins to decline, both because of the shorter "regular" working week and because of elasticity provided for elimination of the overtime rate increases. Furthermore a reduction in the length of the working week should raise the level of employe efficiency in an industry which works under extraordinarily high pressure.

If those concerns that can afford to combine reduction of the working day with offsetting increases in pay would follow the example set by General Motors, we should probably hear less about the need for a universal 40 or 30 hour week from representatives of organized labor. There would be better opportunities to assess the actual cost to employers, workers and the consuming public of shortening the working week, and fuller realization of the need for individual adjustments.

A working week that is long for one industry, for example, may be quite reasonable for those engaged in less fatiguing occupations. And a short working week that will yield good returns to labor and fair profits to employers in one case may be financially disastrous in others. There is no general rule applicable to all industries and every individual concern.

Getting Down To Work.

After visiting Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires and Montevideo, President Roosevelt is on his way home. He has reason to be well pleased with the success of his brief South American tour. Not only did he receive an extremely cordial reception everywhere he went—a tribute that was not only personal but also indicated the high esteem in which the "Good Neighbor" policy is held—but through his felicitous speeches Mr. Roosevelt gave a very helpful impetus to the Buenos Aires conference.

By his fervent expression of faith in democracy, at a time when democracy is so much on the defensive not only in the Old World but also in the New; by his unequivocal support for less restricted trade as a healing force among nations and, above all, by his expressed determination to further co-operative action to preserve peace in this hemisphere, the President made his trip worth while.

But no one speech, or succession of speeches, however inspired, is enough. If the ground has been broken, the real work remains to be done. It is now up to the diplomats left behind in Buenos Aires to give form and substance to the ideals expounded by Mr. Roosevelt, ideals which all the peoples of the New World share.

Expansion of trade between the American republics would unquestionably help to cement present peaceful relations. But such a development would of itself hardly suffice to banish the possibility of war from this hemisphere. A growth in commerce should be paralleled by the development of better treaty relations. In this connection Secretary Hull's proposal urging the immediate all-round ratification of Pan-American arbitration and peace treaties already approved in principle is deserving of support.

It is a sorry commentary on the gap between peace aims and peace efforts that these pacts have for so long remained partially unratified. What is more, two American republics have, within very recent days, shown a contemptuous attitude toward their underlying spirit. Chile, on the eve of the Buenos Aires parley, proceeded to recognize Italy's sovereignty in Ethiopia while Nicaragua, on the heels of Mr. Roosevelt's observations on dictatorships, has recognized the Franco regime as the rightful government of Spain. That such encouragement to aggression could be taken by powers participating in the Buenos Aires parley is a clear warning that promise may be far ahead of performance at that conference.

Nevertheless, the general temper of that conference indicates a real willingness to join hands in strengthening the fabric of peace. And in this respect the United States has given a strong lead by indicating a readiness to generalize the Monroe Doctrine and make peace a collective enterprise of all the Americas.

When President Monroe issued his famous message, Canning jubilantly proclaimed that the New World had been called in to redress the balance of the Old. That, in a deeper sense than was suggested by this British prime minister, may be the case now if the New World resolutely takes a stand for democracy and peace. Once again the New World has an opportunity to redress the balance of the Old.

The Day After Christmas.

It is excellent news that several of the leading department stores in Washington have decided to remain closed on the day after Christmas, thereby giving their tired employes a chance to recuperate from the holiday rush. Other merchants are expected to fall in line with this humane action. In the long run, the stores will probably be fully compensated by the renewed energy and enthusiasm which the extra rest should restore to their clerks.

As a rule, holiday shoppers are both good-natured and considerate. But it is a human failing to forget what takes place on the other side of the counter. The buyer is naturally concerned primarily with his or her own needs and the desire to be waited upon promptly. The shopgirl, standing on her feet from 9 to 6, is expected to be continuously patient, willing, helpful, and cheerful. Pulled this way and that by excited and hurried shoppers, it is she who bears the brunt of all the fun and bustle that goes into the making of Christmas.

For giver and receiver, the strain of Christmas is over at the stroke of 12 on the night of the twenty-fifth. Not so for the girl behind the counter. But this year, if the example of the Government in giving the twenty-sixth as a holiday is widely followed, there will be no sour post-holiday reaction for those who also serve although they only stand and wait.

A telegraph company will transmit "love" in a telegram without charge, but if you add "and kisses" this will cost you something, just as it does under other circumstances.

Open Forum's Advance.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Due to the intellectual courage and clarity of Dr. John W. Studebaker, commissioner of education, it is now a badge of honor rather than a stigma of dishonor to be associated with forums, free speech and honest, open discussion of public problems. Shivers ran down the spines of the timid and scowls were on the foreheads of the reactionaries when Dr. Studebaker accepted the leadership of the Town Hall and calmly informed the public that every philosophy from the ultra conservative to the ultra radical would be aired in its forum. But both the timid and the reactionaries had to grin and bear it.

The Town Hall is, we all appreciate, especially the organization of the prominent and the prosperous; those who can pay the $1 admission fee, and those who can either don a dress suit or other more or less formal garments. There are many who cannot afford the dollar or who lack the dress suit or who for some other reason hesitate to attend the excellent lectures of this rather ritzy assemblage. It is for them that the other open forums are especially desirable. This is no criticism of the Town Hall, for its magnificent contribution to free speech has been that it has made free speech "respectable."

The Washington Open Forum is entitled to considerable attention in this connection, for in the days that preceded the New Deal it endured many rebuffs and discriminations because it insisted that free speech did not mean muzzled mouths. Four times it lost the use of halls because of this stubborn adherence to a principle—once because it sponsored a bonus mass meeting in which it let James W. Ford, Negro Communist, speak on the same platform with Democrats and Republicans; once because its speakers read extracts from Theodore Schroeder's "Erotogenesis of Religion;" once because an overzealous janitor thought a lecture on Esperanto, the international language, was dangerously Bolshevistic, and once because it arranged for a lecture by Miss Nan Britton, author of "The President's Daughter," on "Illegitimacy."

On another occasion the Washington Open Forum was denied the use of a school building for its lectures on the ground that they would engender "acrimonious discussions." Perhaps the viewpoint of the Board of Education was technically correct and no discussions except those which are purely academic should be permitted in school buildings. Be that as it may, the discussions in the Town Hall, with Education Commissioner Studebaker ably presiding, were so vigorous that some of our more nervous citizens might classify them as "acrimonious." And, may it not be intimated, some of the most instructive and informative discussions in Congress and in State Legislatures frequently get rather "acrimonious" when blunt and impassioned champions of varying views take the floor?

LINN A. E. GALE.
President, The Washington Open Forum.

The Spanish Scene.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Patrick J. Clooney attempts to justify the Rebels in Spain for attacking the government and, falls back on the argument that the attack was necessary to protect Christianity. He refers to Defoe's remark of the seventeenth century.

If he wishes to bring up the past, why didn't he justify the attack on the legal Spanish Government by referring to Anatole France, who quotes one French baron as declaring that he had hanged 400 Huguenots upon a single tree, doubtlessly with the idea of saving Christianity.

The past is relevant only as it throws light upon the attitude of the contending parties toward the issues involved, and the chief issue is authoritarianism vs. democracy, in one or more of its several stages.

Austria, Ethiopia and Spain are but battles for the formation of a new Germanic-Roman state ruled by a despot. GUY S. MOORE.
Washington, Dec. 2.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Clooney condemns the so-called uprising of the Spanish peasants against the innocent, unarmed clergy, and exaltingly refers to Gen. Franco's attempt to save all classes of Spain from disastrous socialism. Who, if not the clergy, have kept the peasants on their knees, scratching the soil and paying tribute to the church in order that they may say their daily prayers and the church be adorned with beautiful paintings while peasants remain ill-clad and hungry.

Since when did Mohammedans fight for Christ and Spanish Al Capone's fight for religion!

PUCK.
Washington, Dec. 2.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Objections of "M. S." and Mr. Clooney to the vote cast for parties of the Spanish Popular Front, are based on a misconception of representative government, sometimes misnamed "democracy."

According to the logic of these writers, Theodore Roosevelt should not have been allowed to take his seat in 1905, as he had received but 7,628,834 votes, while 7,894,685 votes were cast against him and for other candidates. Those who opposed him were more numerous than those who supported him. Thus the organized minority won over the scattered majority. This often happens.

The electorial vote is what counts; the popular vote has nothing to do with the result. In Spain, a similar situation prevails except that Parliament (the Cortes) is expected to choose the chief executive. President Azana, Leftist Republican, received a large parliamentary majority. He was the choice of the Popular Front coalition. The totals cast in the February election had nothing to do with the result, the parliamentary districts' make-up determined it, just as the electoral vote does in the United States.

"M. S." claims there were over 4,000,000 "abstentions" in the Spanish election. That is wholly immaterial, since we have many more than that number of voters who fail to attend the polls in the United States in every general election. Some abstain because of their illiteracy, some from indifference, while still more are disfranchised by our undemocratic poll and property taxes still requisite in certain States. But we never think of considering them a factor on any election, whether the result appears close or one-sided. Such "absentees" or "abstentions" are a nonenity, individually and collectively. Who knows how they would have voted had they voted? A. N. WILSON.
Washington, Dec. 3.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a letter to The Post of December 2, Mr. J. O'S. Clooney refers to the Loyalists of Spain as befogged extremists fighting for a half-baked political philosophy, which they know nothing about. We agree that there are thousands in Spain who are fighting for a half-baked philosophy—Fascism, based on militaristic capitalism, chauvinism, forced profits for a few, suppression of workers, unions, freedom of speech, assemblage and publications.

The Loyalist forces in Spain, the trade unions, peasants and all progressive organizations consisting of liberals, socialists, communists, anarchists and left republicans are fighting for a society of the majority—a true democracy.

We agree with Mr. Clooney's assertion that the dangers and injustice inherent in the present unequal distribution is at the bottom of all the unrest of our time, however, we disagree upon his idea pertaining to the church as a beacon for all progress. The church is rich, acquiring its wealth from taxation and and rents and by keeping the masses in superstition. Being a large land holder it naturally remains reactionary. Is it any wonder that the poverty stricken masses strike at the church?

The seizure of power in Russia by an insignificent minority (as Mr. Clooney puts it) is now beginning to achieve its aim and is proving itself to be a true democracy for the working class. Capitalist newspapers of America are lauding the fact of the greatly increased living standards in Russia today. Also that the U. S. S. R. is the bulwark of world peace, while the recent actions of Italy, Japan and Germany are proving themselves to be threats not only to Spain but to all non-Fascist countries. BOB BOVEY.
Martinsburg, W. Va., Dec. 3.

The Proposed Jefferson Memorial

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I quote from your editorial: "To those who know Jefferson the current talk of a pretentious memorial—a monument bigger than the Lincoln Memorial—is painful."

To this, I would like to add that the idea is fantastic. Some of the definitions for fantastic in the big book are "grotesque: eccentric; queer."

Of all the stupid things to do in an attempt to honor Jefferson the erection of a building is it. I would like to see The Post advocate taking the $3,000,000 and putting it into an educational fund for the advancement of free speech.

The antics now going on in the District of Columbia and in the Nation in connection with free speech are postively funny and ridiculous. What a laugh Jefferson, the great advocate of freedom of thought, would get out of the sorry business. He would agree that the erection of a building would be painful.

By all means put that $3,000,000 into the Jefferson Memorial Education Fund. The first thing to do with some of the money would be to print 10,000,000 copies of the Declaration of Independence and put one in every school in the country. Jefferson had something to do with that document if memory serves me rightly.

RUSSELL T. EDWARDS.
Washington, Dec. 3.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The memorial disease has smitten the Capital again, and one can only ask in despair, what will they do—or propose—next?

This latest half-baked boneheaded notion of converting the Tidal Basin into a memorial and some more unneeded high-speed auto roads should be spiked early in the game before the chief beneficiaries, the architectural profession, have their way and put over the brilliance of the idea.

In the first place, why plaster the town with any more memorials, or begin the racket in an innocent new park like Anacostia. Let's compromise by sticking a few more generals or symbolic statues in Meridian Hill Park and then call a peace conference on that sort of thing.

At least bury the idea till the next depression. There's no call for such work now in the sacred name of relief, the New Deal having by its vociferous claims solved all our troubles. As a Democrat and steadfast anti-New Dealer, I yield nothing in admiration to Thomas Jefferson, but if this memorial erection mania isn't stopped at some point, it will never end until Jackson, Monroe and lesser lights have had their inning on park soil.

A place created as a park should function as such, with a minimum of artificial beauty. At least there should be something in the way of a referendum, plus a moratorium, before this latest dose is slipped across. You can call me, if you want to, Indignant Citizen!

Cats And Personalities.

CAPT. EBENEZER LONGBOW was a recent visitor in Washington. When I came across him in a downtown hotel he suggested that we go to the cat show, which surprised me.

"Cats?" said I. "I didn't know you were interested in cats."

"Those who attend the show," said he "cannot fail to be impressed with the dignity and poise with which the dainty aristocrats suffer themselves to be stared at and appraised."

"That's feminine language," I said, accusingly. "And it sounds, too, as though you had been to the show."

"I have," he admitted. "Mrs. Mixing is one of the exhibitors."

"Oh," said I, for that explained everything. Mrs. Arabella Mixing and Capt. Longbow have places adjoining in the county and their friends have long expected them to make a match. It was a shock to all of us when the lady closed her place and took a job with Uncle Sam. But it interested us to notice that Capt. Longbow's visits to Washington became more frequent than they had been previously.

• • • •

So we went to the show. "Though," I protested, "I much prefer dogs."

"You would," said Capt. Longbow. "It is a human weakness that in no way reflects on a cat's personality. A dog ministers to a man's vanity. It is obsessed with the foolish notion that its master is in a class by himself; that there is nobody like him; nobody so wise and good. It tells him so every day; and, oh, how a man eats it up. And you can't blame a man at that. He knows there is no insincerity about a dog's flattery. The poor mutt means every wag of its tail, every worshipful look in its eyes. But there's no such foolishness about a cat. She's wise to humankind. She readily gives her affection, but she demands payment in the same coin. She repays every act of kindness, as it were, with so much purr."

I ignored the pun. "You like dogs yourself," I reminded him.

"You're telling me" he said. "I've got the finest bird and rabbit dogs in the county. Why, only yesterday—no the day before yesterday, I ——"

But, happily, I didn't have to listen to his hunting experiences. I just nodded from time to time and thought of other things.

• • • •

Almost the first persons we met inside the show were Mr. and Mrs. Ezekiel Blimmer. Eke always reminds me of Artemus Ward's kangaroo; he's such an amoosin' little cuss. His wife is a big woman who stays in the background and says, "Now, Eke" whenever he seems to be getting out of bounds.

"Miss Cherry roped us in," said Eke. "Met her on her way here to do her bit."

Miss Cherry Simplee is Mrs. Mixing's sister and she spelled her in giving moral support to their cat. Miss Simplee is 222 pounds of smiling health. When she laughs out loud, which she does once in a while, she invites everybody to join in, and everybody is glad to.

It was Miss Cherry's infectious laughter that attracted us to the group of which Eke was the center. "I was giving these ladies and gentlemen," he explained to us, "the inside history of the Kilkenny cats who fought, you will remember, until there was nothing left of them but their tails, with a few details gleaned by myself during a personal investigation of the ancient story. I shall not repeat the story now, contenting myself with a bare synopsis. What happened was that the Kilkenny cats went to the Isle of Man and left their tails behind them. Which is why the Manx cats are without tails to this day."

"'Huh!' said the Manx cat. 'How silly tales can be!'" It was Mrs. Mixing. "How are you all?" she went on. "Glad to see you. Well, I didn't win a prize, but who cares? You're coming home with me for supper. Let me see. There's six of us. Right. And the rabbit pie on the back of the stove is big enough for six big appetites. Eb, stick around and help Cherry bring home the cat. The rest of us will go on to the apartment."

But, as it happened, it was Miss Cherry who came along with us and Mrs. Mixing who stayed behind with Capt. Longbow and the cat, which seemed to surprise nobody.

• • • •

The sisters have the cutest little apartment imaginable. The kitchenette is so small that when Miss Cherry enters it she has to do so sideways. When she's in she fills the space between the stove and the sideboard and the shelves. She has to come outside to turn around. "But," she explains brightly, "by moving a few inches to the right or left I can reach everything and don't have to turn around. There is less walking to do in this kitchen than any I have ever known."

The rabbit was hot and ready when Capt. Longbow and Mrs. Mixing arrived, and it was a merry party that sat down at the little table. We were crowded but happy. Capt. Longbow told us all about how the rabbits were shot; told stories of animals and their furs; of rabbit skins that masqueraded as furs of another kind.

"And cat skins, too," Mr. Blimmer interrupted. "And for that matter, did it ever occur to you that there is a striking similarity between the carcass of a cat and a rabbit? How can you tell——Say, Cherry, where's that cat? Are you sure——"

"Now, Eke!" said Mrs. Blimmer.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

The Old Thunderer.

IN A WORLD going crazy it is no comfort to read that the London Times, in a childish attempt to blame some foreign culprit for the national embarrassment caused by the British King's romance with Mrs. Simpson, has picked the American press out of the line-up. Not that the American press has anything to regret, because we only recognized and hopped to a great historical event while the British papers, faithless to their responsibility, tried to revoke the truth by suppressing the news of it. The regret and the shame are all theirs, for they shirked a plain obligation of a free press, and the explanation of Lord Beaverbrook and others that they were silenced by law and the facts of the Simpson case looks very pathetic now. The law and the facts of the case are the same today as they were when the British papers ignored history, but they are full of the story at last.

However stuffy and pompous the London Times, however roundabout its language, the old Thunderer did represent intelligence, character and courage and generally spoke sense. But the Times editorial attributing to the American press and public the present dangerous trouble with a spoiled King of frivolous habits sounds like something from the pen of Josef Goebbels, the Nazi minister of propaganda. As the mouthpiece of a nation whose people are compelled by law to believe the most idiotic denials of plain truth Goebbels has ceased to shock that dimishing portion of the world where reason still exists.

• • • •

THE TIMES editorial conveys an unhappy suggestion that the bugs may be carried on the wind. There is no press on earth more attentive to personal news than the British papers in their routine dealings with the royal family and no people with as keen an appetite for journalistic smut. In fact, in happy days the British press is largely devoted to ballyhoo for the personalities of the royal set.

The papers print its pictures in endless variety, they invade the royal homes to photograph the nurseries of the royal babies, they describe the wedding presents to exhaustion, and their circus treatment of a royal wedding under approved conditions makes the American frenzies over a big fight resemble an ad for a long lost dog. Last winter one of the most popular newspapers published the very personal news that the Duchess of Kent was temporarily out of society because she was nursing her baby herself.

If the King had selected for his bride a royal princess, whether from Greece, Holland or Bulgaria, however bad that female's blood, the British press would have been full to suffocation of fulsome special essays by broken-down social figures, eager to exploit their connections for a few quid, and the formal royal announcement would have been preceded by much circumstantial tattle. All such copy would, of course, be complimentary in the peculiar captouching technique which is reserved for royal affairs, but that is not to say that all personal news in the British press is hygienic. They have their dirty personal copy, too, as when someone in society is caught in a gambling scandal or a Mr. X divorce trial. But, generally speaking, they prefer to dig their raw material out of the great American smut deposits of Hollywood, Reno and New York.

THE BRITISH are one of the few nations that have kept their sanity amid the imbecile gibberings of countries which exhort their people to breed like animals and put little muskets in the hands of children 6 years old. It will be a lonesome world for the United States if now they, too, go haywire, but the Times of London speaks for England, and that editorial is not reassuring.

The Times must know as well as we do that the King long ago showed a preference for night club life, that he is personally obstreperous and, finally, that this present trouble, whatever the merits of the case, was his own doing. If it be dangerous to the monarchy and the empire that he marry an American twice divorced, that is an affair in which the American press and the personal curiosity of the American people had no initiative. Our papers merely foresaw the dangerous and historical complications which have now developed, and our people have shown no more interest in this deeply personal affair than the British will now that the lid is off.

And, anyway, speaking of responsibility, bad taste and the like, what sort of man is this King who throws his country into peril at an hour when, as the London Times says, events outside have imposed a duty to stand as a rock amid the seething tides of communism and dictatorship?

Everyday London

Before Simpson Affair Became Known, England Was Discussing Sir John Simon's Sly Move Against Mosley's Black Shirts.

By David Wills.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

SIR JOHN SIMON is usually described as a cold, legalistic fellow, No. 1 splitter of legal hairs. He has acquired the reputation of a one-man version of the Supreme Court, and is a master at turning out legal opinions to prove that according to the non-existent British constitution something or other ought not to be done, however much our democrats want to do it. His most famous decision was that the General Strike was illegal; when they heard this the strikers just lost heart and gave themselves up.

As leader of the National Liberals, he is damned above Judas Iscariot for splitting the Liberal Party, selling his soul to Balwin for a seat in the cabinet. The damning loses force because the non-National Liberals are themselves still divided into the party, led by Sir Archibald Sinclair, romantically handsome Scot, whose slight stammer disappears in debate, and the Lloyd George family, composed of Father David, Son Gwyllm, Daughter Megan, jointly known as the Father, Son and Holy Terror.

(Which reminds one, apropos of nothing the British papers won't print, that the present King is reported among the heathens to have once offered to marry any girl his pompous and heir-wanting officials cared to choose, bar Megan Lloyd-George.)

Public Enthusiastic For Anti-Uniform Bill.

SIR JOHN SIMON'S reputation is a little hard on a man who wants so much to be liked. But for once he is basking in the warmth of public approval, because he has framed a bill to put down Sir Oswald Mosley and his inevitably riding-booted Fascists. The heart of the matter is really in the boots; they are the Samson's hair of the Fascists, and the quickest solution would doubtless have been to ban boots except for genuine bona fide horse riders. But that would have been too simple, and accordingly Sir John has produced his bill. In his gentle hands we are assured that it will merely kill the Fascist threat; but in the hands of some future home secretary, more reactionary and ruthless, it may be a useful weapon to suppress all left wing political opposition.

The bill prohibits the wearing of uniforms and military drilling for political propaganda, with the definition of a uniform left to the courts; penalty, imprisonment for three months, or a fine of 50 pounds, or both. Two years' imprisonment, or a fine of 500 pounds, or both is the punishment for organizers of such quasi-military organizations. This may be applied not only when the purpose of the organization is proved, but also when there is reasonable apprehension that it may be so used.

The Attorney General may go behind a party's back, apply to the high court, and on showing a prima facie case, may get an order tying up the accused party, pending investigation. In reactionary hands, this may be as powerful as a weapon against perfectly proper left wing parties as the court injunction has been in America against organized labor.

The bill also provides that in court proceedings it will be permissible to present as evidence actions taken by persons who merely appear to be members of the accused organization, and it will then be up to the accused to prove if they can that the persons in fact had nothing to do with them. This opens the door for the agent provocateur, and quietly reverses the traditional British doctrine that an accused is innocent until proved guilty.

Critics Argue Police Have Enuogh Authority.

THE BILL may be modified before it passes through Parliament. Indeed some of its critics maintain that the police already have most of the necessary powers to deal with the Fascists, and all the new bill need do is ban political military uniforms. The existing case law on the subject is pleasantly confused. There are two principal cases, and they contradict each other. In 1882 it was ruled that a meeting of the Salvation Army could not be prohibited merely because there was reason to believe, and the Army knew it, that hooligans would attempt to break up the meeting, cause a breach of the peace. The Army could not be prevented from doing a legal act merely because it was known that that act would provoke others to perform an illegal act of frenzy.

But in 1902 it was ruled with equal power that magistrates were within their rights in prohibiting a Protestant Crusader from holding meetings in the Catholic quarter of Liverpool, which he knew would end in a riot. In any case, the police certainly have the power to prohibit meetings which they reasonably apprehend will cause a breach of the peace, and may arrest those who persist in holding a banned meeting for obstructing the police in the performance of their duties.

If is it possible for the police to guide the processing Orangemen away from the Catholic quarters, so that shouts of "Down with the Pope," and "Up with King Billy" shall not provoke a riot, it would certainly seem within the police power to prevent Sir Oswald from marching his provocative processions through the Jewish East End of London to the fervent cry of "Down with the Jews." But Sir John says not, and one doesn't question the Supreme Court.

Sir "Supreme Court" Shares News With B. B. C.

SIR JOHN has had to share the news with the B. B. C. The British Broadcasting Corporation is an Institution—like Writing to the Times, or not speaking to someone who hasn't been introduced to you; or not whistling on Sunday. Its complacent broadcasts are the despair of some, but the admiration of most of its license-paying listeners, who thank their gods and Sir John Reith that the B. B. C. is not as others. One of the very admirable products is the weekly magazine, The Listener. Its editor is Mr. R. Lambert, and Mr. Lambert has just won a slander action against a Sir Cecil Levita.

Damages awarded by the jury were £7,500, with costs, a measure surely not of the injustices suffered by Mr. Lambert, but of the indignation felt by the jury for Sir Cecil Levita's part in the case. On hearing this gentle figure, editors of British newspapers rushed to settle out of court quite a number of impending libel actions. The libel law in England offers plenty of opportunity for blackmailers. To a jury of 11 good men and true, and even to some of our judges, the newspapers are fabulously rich, and should be soaked good and hard whenever reasonable opportunity offers. In cases of doubt, decide against the paper.

The French libel laws let the papers get away with murder, and in America it is permissible to bring in evidence of character to prove that even if a statement was libelous, it didn't cause any damage because the plaintiff had no character to damage. But in England, to plead justification is to invite damages compounded to infinity. Which is one reason behind the reticence of British papers on many subjects which has provoked the charge that there is a British censorship.

There is no such person as a British censor. There is only a combination of what the English inhibitions do not permit, as good form, plus the universal desire of British newspapers to play politics rather than report news, plus the puritan inhibitions of the distributors of newspapers, plus the libel laws, as enforced and interpreted in the courts. And the last is by no means least.

Fine of $2 Breaks 36-Year Record For Safe Driving

A perfect driving record of 36 years' standing went the way of all flesh yesterday when Judge John P. McMahon, in Traffic Court, fined James B. McDonald, 55-year-old street-car motorman $2 for passing a red light.

He was fined after Private E. A. Horsley testified he boarded McDonald's car at Fourth and G street northwest and rode with him for two blocks and handed him a ticket after he allegedly passed a red light at Sixth street.

McDonald told Judge McMahon that Horsley stood in such a way as to obstruct his view so he could not see the light. The motorman, who lives in the 400 block of A street southwest, told the court he had been operating an automobile in the city for 20 years and his street car for 36 years, and that he had never been asked to "even show my permit."

In handing down the sentence Judge McMahon said "I'm sorry that I have to spoil such a fine record.

Out In China

By Barnet Nover

The War In Inner Mongolia.

LONG AGO they used to sing in English music halls:

If the weather it were finer
We could see the war in China
If it weren't for the 'ouses in between!

Little attention is being paid by the outside world to the current "war in China." As a military operation it is only of minor significance. And, at the moment, there are a great many "'ouses in between." There is the Spanish crisis and the crisis concerning the British throne and the German-Japanese anti-Communist flare-up and the Bucnos Aires love feast. What with these, and other stirring developments nearer home, it appears to be of relatively little importance that a general by the name of Han Fu-tso, who is governor of a province called Suiyan, some days ago licked the stuffings out of an invading force of Mongols and Manchukuoans and captured a city known as Palingmao.

Yet in this modern world of ours there is nothing that is isolated and nothing that is really remote. The fighting now going on in Inner Mongolia is, in fact, intimately related to many other developments now engrossing the attention of mankind.

• • • •

IN A CURIOUS way the war of Suiyanese against their invaders repeats the pattern to be encountered in Spain. For while it is, primarily, a civil war of the kind that has plagued China for years, its overtones and its implications are international.

Germany and Italy have not formally declared war on Spain or on Russia, which is helping the Spanish government. Japan has declared war neither on China nor on Russia. There has been no need of such action. The Fascist powers have found it more convenient to employ Gen. Franco as the instrument of their policy and let him do the fighting with weapons they are providing. In the same way the Japanese, who have had a great deal of experience in such matters, have been employing Mongols and Manchukuoans.

It is simpler, safer and much less costly than waging war directly. That is—up to a point. If reports are true that a large contingent of Germans has landed at Seville to reinforce Franco's army, it would indicate that the point has been reached when indirect action is no longer deemed adequate. And it may be that in view of the smashing defeat administered Japan's Mongol allies in the fighting along the Suiyan-Chahar border, the Japanese will now deem it necessary to take up the war burden directly.

But why is Japan interested in the fighting in Suiyan? Why, after the capture of Palingmao, did a spokesman for the Japanese army find it necessary to threaten to take "appropriate measures if the Mongolian hostilities menace Manchukuo or if China is threatened by Communists."

• • • •

THE ANSWER to these questions can be found in an examination of (1) Japan's policy regarding North China; (2) Japan's policy toward Russia, and (3) the strategic importance of Inner Mongolia from the Japanese, Russian and Chinese points of view.

It is no secret that Japan has for some time sought to extend its authority south from Manchuria and that it has succeeded to the extent of making the Peiping-Tientsin area, for all intents and purposes, a Japanese sphere of influence. Chahar Province, which controls the important caravan route between Peiping and Russian-dominated Outer Mongolia, has also come under Japan's wing.

But the Japanese appetite grows with the eating. Tokyo is eager, both for commercial and strategic reasons, to sever all of North China and Inner Mongolia from Nanking's jurisdiction. This means the elimination of China's authority, not only from Hopei and Chahar, which has already been done in large measure, but also from Shantung, Shansi and Suiyan. The driving of a deep wedge running from Manchukuo in the east to Sinkiang (Chinese Turkestan) in the west will effectively separate Russia from China.

If such a buffer state is not created, Japan's domination of North China, even if it becomes a reality, would, in the opinion of the Japanese, always be threatened from the side of Russia. If, on the other hand, Russia can be cut off from all land access to China, the progressive domination of China by Japan could proceed without interruption. And, what is more, the Mongolian buffer state could be used as a convenient base of attack first on the Russian-dominated republic of Outer Mongolia and ultimately on Soviet Russia itself. The Russians firmly believe, and with some reason, that Japan wants to make eastern Siberia from Lake Baikal to the Pacific a Japanese colony.

THIS WEEK Japan has landed troops at Tsingtao, the principal port of Shantung province, ostensibly to protect Japanese interests threatened by a strike. An additional reason may very well be the re-conquest of Shantung which Japan once controlled but which it was forced to relinquish in 1922.

But of greater immediate importance than Shantung, rich and valuable as that province undoubtedly is, are the wind-swept and arid acres of Suiyan. For as long as Suiyan and the regions to the west of Suiyan remain under Chinese jurisdiction there is always a possibility of Sino-Russian co-operation against Japan. Indeed the Japanese are firmly convinced that Chiang Kai-shek's new-found stubborness in the face of Japanese threats is to no small extent attributable to the Chinese feeling that Russia, whose war power is steadily growing, is a potential ally.

To be sure, Chiang Kai-shek is anti-Communist. He has waged no fewer than five campaigns against the Chinese Reds. But the continued spread of Japanese power south from the Great Wall constitutes for him a much more immediate threat than does Chinese communism, now bottled up in northwest China. As for Russia, the recent conclusion of the German-Japanese pact has served to underline Japan's allegedly aggressive aims toward the Soviet Union. In consequence, a Sino-Soviet alliance can hardly be ruled out.

In the present Far Eastern situation, Mongolia plays somewhat the same role that Czechoslovakia and Poland do in Europe. With Suiyan in Chinese hands, with the Japanese barred from establishing a buffer state between China and Russia, a direct thrust on the Soviet Union by way of Manchukuo would, under existing circumstances, be extremely dangerous to Japan.

Russia today is in a powerful position to fight back. This the Japanese realize. And that is why the intrinsically unimportant frontier skirmishes along the borders of Suiyan are being watched with such concern by Tokyo, Nanking and Moscow. For the outcome of that skirmishing may conceivably determine the destinies of a continent.

In Praise Of Colloquialisms.

It is comforting to read the defense of colloquialisms and slang made by Prof. Walter Barnes, of New York University, at the convention of the National Council of Teachers of English. Prof. Barnes' scorn of precisely proper English is only surpassed by his admiration for "the pleasant conversational American vernacular, vigorous, picturesque, full-blooded, folksy, racy, sinewy." Except for a few "Emily Postish" situations, he holds, the American youth has no practical use for the wholly correct English that the schools try to teach him. "Language," Prof. Barnes holds, "is primarily a mode of social conduct, a type of group behavior," and to be effective, the language of the individual must conform with that of the group.

Naturally, Prof. Barnes does not advocate careless, as distinguished from colloquial, speech. Sloppy speaking is as unconvincing and generally as colorless as pendantically correct speaking. A careless disregard of the rules of speech are as much to be dispraised as the over-careful speech of the five-year-old Macaulay who, asked if he still smarted from a burn, replied with the snobbish phrasing of a conscious prodigy, "Madam, the agony has abated." What he does ask, apparently, is the richly imaginative talk of an "Al" Smith, with its common allusions used in an uncommon manner, its vigorous coining of slang to meet circumstances in which the old words do not satisfy his ear, and its fine use of imagery. Speakers like "Al" Smith are perhaps born, not made, but colorless, pedantic speakers can be made out of potentially forceful speakers by a too thorough drilling in textbook English.—Hartford Courant.

Where Japan, China, Russia Face Each Other

The Supreme Court

Instead Of 'Packing,' Limiting Justices Or Requiring 7-to-2 Decisions, Student Urges Redefinition Of Constitution.

By Robert E. Cushman.

The author of the following, abstracted from an article published by the Public Affairs Committee, is professor of government at Cornell University. Excisions are indicated by asterisks.

THE AVERAGE CITIZEN has a very wholesome respect for the Constitution of the United States. His respect does not usually come from any clear or accurate knowledge of the document itself, but grows out of the belief that the Constitution sanctions those policies which he approves and forbids those which seem to him dangerous or oppressive.

His reaction to the Supreme Court is similarly direct and forthright; its decisions are sound if he likes them and unsound if he does not. While this solution of our constitutional problems by the "hunch" method has the advantage of simplicity, it is rather too simple to be helpful in answering two very vital questions now before the country: (1) Is our Constitution adequate to the demands of our present day national life? (2) Is the Supreme Court preserving our Constitution or obstructing its normal and healthy expansion?

It is well to remember that the "fathers" who framed the Constitution were no more competent to manage their affairs than we are to manage ours. They relied upon what political experience they had, but much of their work was frankly experimental. Some parts of the Constitution in which they took the greatest pride, such as the intricate method of electing the President, failed completely to work as they intended. • • •

One thing that can be done to the Court is to "pack" it. • • •

In 1870, the Supreme Court declared the legal tender act invalid by a vote of four to three. There were two vacancies on the Court at the time. President Grant filled these places with two men who promptly voted with the minority of three to reverse the decision by a vote of five to four. Historians still argue as to whether Grant "packed" the Court, a question which we are not called upon to settle. It is more important to note that the incident cost the Court heavily in public confidence. • • •

Furthermore, the packing of the Court with justices of a particular breed or color of view promises very uncertain results. If these men are really the kind whose judicial work will be directly governed by their political and economic affiliations, who will in short live up to the implied understanding which led to their appointment, they would appear to be unfit for judicial service. Nothing but calamity can be expected from a definitely biased Court. If, on the other hand, judicially-minded men are appointed in the expectation that their known predilections and hunches will color their work on the bench, it should be noted that experience does not bear this out sufficiently to make the method a very reliable instrument of specific reform. • • •

But it is not necessary to swamp the Court in order to change its personnel. Five justices are now over 74 years of age and a sixth is over 70. The President will hardly escape the responsibility of appointing one or more justices. In doing so he will affect the trend of the Court's decisions for many years. If he appoints men with the broad judicial tolerance of a Brandeis, Stone, or Cardozo, the Constitution may prove flexible enough to meet the demands we are making on it. • • •

ANOTHER QUICK and easy method of dealing with the Supreme Court is to deprive it of its jurisdiction to decide cases in which constitutional questions are most likely to arise. This also may be done by act of Congress without amending the Constitution. Many who favor this plan are not wholly sure of their ground and are prone to lose track of certain basic facts. • • •

Congress could constitutionally take from the Supreme Court all appellate jurisdiction, although this would leave a very peculiar judicial system. Or Congress could lop off the appellate jurisdiction of the Court in particular kinds of cases as it did when it made the jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts of Appeals final in all Federal criminal cases not involving constitutional questions. But this vitally important fact must be kept in mind. As long as the Supreme Court is left with any appellate jurisdiction whatever, Congress cannot constitutionally keep the Court from passing upon the validity of acts of Congress in any and all cases lying within that jurisdiction in which such constitutional questions can possibly arise. • • •

STILL ANOTHER proposal for "reforming" the Court is to provide that no act of Congress shall be invalidated by the Supreme Court unless seven of the nine justices agree. • • •

Let us examine the plan more closely. Does not the "reasonable doubt" argument, in the form used, prove too much? All the courts have ever meant in saying that the unconstitutionality of a statute should be free from reasonable doubt before the act is held void, is that there should be no reasonable doubt in the minds of the judge or judges rendering the decision. Mr. Justice Roberts ought not to hold the A. A. A. void if he has doubts about its invalidity; but if he is not doubtful why should he vote to uphold it because Mr. Justice Stone has doubts, or believes it valid? There will always be some doubt somewhere or there would be no issue in the first place. This is the reason why a court which claims to be governed by the "reasonable doubt" test of validity continues to hand down five-to-four decisions. It does not, however, prove that we ought not to prevent such decisions.

The seven-to-two rule might increase public confidence in the decisions of the Court and allay resentment. Exasperation at a decision one does not like is increased when it is a five-to-four decision. Then there is the other side of the picture which would appear when an act of Congress, attacked as invalid, is upheld and enforced when six members of the Court believe it to be unconstitutional. That would hardly produce widespread confidence in such a decision. • • •

LASTLY, it is proposed that we pass a constitutional amendment which would take away from the Supreme Court (and all the other courts presumably) all power to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional. This plan is simple and thorough. It makes Congress the final judge of its own powers under the Constitution. It is foolish to urge that the country would go to the dogs or to the reds, if this important change were made. No other constitutional government in the world gives to its courts the broad power of judicial review which our Supreme Court enjoys. • • •

Another fact should be kept in mind. The Supreme Court does not confine itself to invalidating acts dear to the hearts of social and economic reformers. Sometimes it has occasion to hold void laws which invade the constitutional civil rights of the citizen, his freedom of speech, his religious liberty, his equality before the law, his right to trial. If judicial review is abolished these rights also are left to the legislative discretion for their protection.

This brings us to the final position which may be taken by those who believe that our constitutional and judicial system calls for some change. This position is that we should change our Constitution to meet new demands rather than change the Court. Accepting judicial review as a going concern we can all agree that it is most open to attack where the Supreme Court is interpreting the vague and general clauses of the Constitution or is applying an ancient provision to conditions lying beyond the contemplation of the founding fathers. • • •

We may, however, feel that our present difficulties are due partly to an overzealous extension of judicial power and partly to the failure of an eighteenth century Constitution to meet adequately the demands of the twentieth century. In this case we may attempt to solve both problems by clarifying amendments to the Constitution. • • •

This plan might well be tried before anything is "done to" the Court, since it promises not only an immediate adjustment of the Constitution to the current of our present national life, but also a forced retirement of the Court from the fields of constitutional construction in which it faces the greatest difficulty and incurs the sharpest criticism.

Cleric Invites All to Attend Peace Service

5-Minute Rites Held Daily at Epiphany Church Downtown.

An open invitation to downtown business men and women and Federal employes to attend the daily five-minute noon services of peace at the Church of the Epiphany between now and Christmas was extended yesterday by the rector, the Rev. Z. Barney Phillips.

Inaugurated for one year at the church Armistice Day, these services consist of brief prayers for peace, and end promptly at 12:10 p. m.

"There is increasing opportunity for everyone interested in the cause of peace to gather daily at this season of the year, which is crowned by commemoration of the birth of the Prince of Peace," explained Dr. Phillips.

The Rev. J. E. Elliott will be the celebrant at Holy Communion tomorrow morning in St. Luke's Episcopal Church. Sunday School and Bible class will convene at 9:30 a. m. Holy Communion and a sermon by the rector will take place at 11 a. m.

Holy Communion will be held at St. John's Church tomorrow at 8 a. m., with Dr. Oliver J. Hart, the rector, preaching at 9:30 and again at 11 a. m.

Holy Communion will be held at 7:30 a. m. tomorrow in St. John's Church, of Chevy Chase, Md. Church School will convene at 9, and Dr. Joseph E. Williams, the rector, will preach at 11.

On the Air Today

Jack Oakie has been selected to replace Rupert Hughes as featured performer in the "Caravan," beginning December 29. The change shouldn't occasion any particular expressions of surprise. It has seemed to me for several weeks now that the "Caravan" and "Chateau" shows—outstanding in production efforts and length of time on the air—have been slowly ebbing away. Both have originated on the West Coast.

As reported in this space last week, Al Jolson, Martha Raye and others have been signed to inject new red corpuscles into the "Chateau's" venerable old system.

Now comes Oakie. He is to be the president of a mythical college in what is advertised as "a sparkling new 'Caravan' series for 1937." The entire show will be set with a collegiate background with guest singers from the ranks of radio and pictures. Each "class" also will present prominent comedians as visiting lecturers. And then, some bona fide college talent from leading institutions.

Benny Goodman and his swing band will remain, with Georgie Stoll and his orchestra.

Oakie appeared last in radio, as I recall, with Ken Murray. The two or three appearances were coincident with the comedian's marriage a few months ago. But this will be his first starring air assignment.

• • • •

Fred Allen, too, has been bitten by the bug of change. Beginning next Wednesday the Yankee comedian opens his amateur hour to professionals. In other words, it will be operated along present lines but the term "amateur" will include any performer—amateur or professional—who can make use of a good break in the business. Affiliated stations, carrying the N. B. C. program, are being invited to comb their territories for talent known favorably locally but not to the national network audiences.

• • • •

Program feature for today is the "Lohengrin" broadcast, WMAL, at 3, direct from the Chicago Civic Opera theater. Instead of the usual type of entr'acte comments, N. B. C. will present Alec Templeton, the blind pianist introduced to American radio by Jack Hylton last winter, who will tell what the opera means to him as a listener. N. B. C. presents three afternoons of opera from Chicago before beginning the Metropolitan air season.

• • • •

Other features:

Bridge experts—Interviewed in Chicago at American Bridge League's national tournament, WJSV, at 4.

Football—University of Southern California-Notre Dame, WOL, at 4:45.

Waring Gang—Visits with "Saturday Night Swing Club", WJSV, at 6:45.

Irene Bordoni—Presented by Ed Wynn as guest attraction, WMAL, at 8.

Tita Schipa—Guests with Vincent Lopez and orchestra in "Speed Show", WJSV, at 9.

Frank Morgan—Turns comedian for "Chateau" guest spot, WRC, at 9:30. Edward Everett Horton will interview Bunny Dryden, daring wire walker.

Harry Salter—Replaces Al Goodman as maestro of Saturday night "Hit Parade", WJSV, at 10. "I'll Sing You A Thousand Love Songs" leads this week.

Churches of Christ Announce Subject

"God the Only Cause and Creator" is the subject of the lesson-sermon in all the Churches of Christ, Scientist tomorrow. The golden text is from Isaiah 44:24: "I am the Lord that maketh all things; that stretcheth forth the heavens alone; that spreadeth abroad the earth by myself."

Among the citations which comprise the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "For as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God." (Romans 8:14).

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "When we learn the way in Christian Science and recognize man's spiritual being, we shall behold and understand God's creation—all the glories of earth and heaven and man."

King and Mrs. Simpson Are Portrayed at Dance

Costume Affair Given by Miss Mary Cootes at 2601 30th St., in Honor of Visiting Brother, Presents Several Notable Persons.

By Dudley Harmon.

King Edward and England's "constitutional crisis," Mrs. Wallis Simpson, created a sensation when they appeared in replica last evening at the small and most informal costume dance given by Miss Mary Cootes, of Alexandria, Va. Wallis, in real life Miss Christine Ekengren, chose a severe black gown and wore her hair parted in the middle and sleeked back back for the occasion in true Simpson fashion. The King, on closer investigation of his uniform and make-up, proved to be none other than Cuthbert Train, of our own City of Washington.

Guests present at the dance—and there were just a handful—were friends of Miss Cootes' brother, Mr. Merritt Cootes, for whom the party was given. They are saying "hail and farewell" to Mr. Cootes, who is in the diplomatic service and leaves in a few weeks' time for his new post in Havana. He arrived in Washington last week from Shanghai, China.

Variety of Costumes.

Among those noted in the array of gypsies, peasants, clowns and pierrots who danced until the small hours were "Wallis'" sister, Miss Elsie Ekengren, who went as a Scotch lassie; Mr. and Mrs. Corcoran Thom, jr., Mr. James Mitchell, Mr. Richard Griffin, Baron Serge Korff, the Misses Marion and Elizabeth Shouse and Miss Mary Dixon Cook, of Norfolk, Va., a cousin of Miss Cootes, who is spending the week-end with her. The dance was held at the bachelor establishment at 2601 Thirtieth street, presided over by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Joyce, where Mr. William Brewster, Mr. Frank Currie and Mr. Sherlock Davis, and several other New Dealers, preside.

Earlier in the day several important parties made the afternoon a hectic one for members of Capital society. One of the largest affairs was the tea given by Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock and her cousin, Miss Dorothy Sollers, which was attended by 300 guests.

Mrs. Fahnestock and her cousin received in the drawing room, which was decorated with vases of roses and chrysanthemums. Mrs. Fahnestock wore a dress made of old black lace, which once belonged to her grandmother, and which she wore over a gold background, and Miss Sollers' gown of dark blue chiffon had a redingote of the same material in a vivid green.

At the Tea Table.

Among those who poured tea during the afternoon were Miss McCulloch Miller, Mrs. Rushmore Patterson, Mrs. Price Whittaker, Miss Alice Wilkons, Mrs. L. M. C. Smith, Mrs. Sharon Farr, Mrs. James S. Taylor, and Mrs. Mark Bristol.

Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman entertained at another of the pleasant parties given yesterday, a luncheon for eight guests, at her home, Tuxeden, near Bethesda, in honor of Mme. E. Heilmann, wife of the former Counselor of the French Embassy.

Mme. Heilmann, who, with the former Counselor, was in Washington at the time the late former Ambassador Jules Jusserand was the French envoy here, is spending several days in the Capital, renewing friendships of those years. She and M. Heilmann have been living in their villa at Menton, on the Riviera, where her daughter, the one who is married and residing in France, and the other, Mrs. St. George Burke, who lives in Ireland, have recently visited them.

Guests at the luncheon yesterday were all friends whom Mme. Heilmann knew during her residence here.

Mrs. Tuckerman's daughter, Miss Alice Noel Tuckerman, who is making her debut this afternoon, was the guest of Mrs. James Francis Sullivan, of The Woods, Radnor, Pa., last night at the Junior dinner dance held in Philadelphia.

THE MERRY WHIRL by MARYLYN

Leave it to Ed Corley to think up a new word. A group of younger-setters were visiting the Pall Mall Room of the Raleigh for their first time. Ed was commenting upon the dance floor and said that it was "slickery." Little Sally Mitchell LeFevre was intrigued with the soft colorful indirect lighting and simply could not get over the queer light that tipped the cigarettes. Instead of the usual red and gray the light looked like nothing so much as a gigantic firefly.

Sally had on a terra cotta colored woolen skirt with metallic blouse of brown and gold stripes. Her hat was one of those quaint dark brown crepe affairs that fit snugly and go up to a point. Her soft curls were worn in a single roll around her head, and swooped out at the sides, this with the hat gave a very attractive Dutch effect. Across the table from her, sat Eleanor Flood, who was wearing black with a little "pussy cat" hat and a cravat of scarlet velvet. With them were Swann Sinclair and Clem Conger, who between dances and puns, endeavored to find the plug where one might attach a telephone. So desperate did they become that they all but made a call in the hopes of discovering the elusive gadget.

Just as the chill was becoming all the more noticeable, what with old Sol slipping slowly over the horizon, we saw George Busheister striding across the street, his nose and ears pink from the biting frost and his great coat whipping around at the command of the North wind.

Further down the street Dolores Barreto and Anne Hall Dunlop emerged from the protecting warmth of the Mayflower Hotel and buried their faces in high collars, tucked hands into pockets and hurried down the street. Patiently waiting at one of the doors in hopes that some kind soul would let him in, sat bobtailed "Gov. Winthrop." As each person approached the hotel the big tiger cat turned his amber eyes on him with a look of appeal. Finally the chief mouser or mascot was swooped up into some cat-loving person's arms and carried within.

Mrs. George H. Dern has quietly slipped into town and joined her two daughters, Mrs. Harry Baxter and Betsy Dern. They have taken a small house over in Georgetown and will make their home here for sometime.

Mrs. Edward Everett Robbins entertained at dinner at the Mayflower, where she is making her home this winter, and is planning another small informal dinner on Friday, when she will have as her honor guests, the James M. Greens.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Much Older Man Tells Woman He Loves Her; Then Withdraws Statement; She Is Annoyed.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Some time ago I met a man who is a good many years older than I. We had many things in common and developed a pleasant friendship, which I enjoyed very much. Not long after we met he confessed that he cared for me, but I remained strictly non-commital, for which I am now more than glad.

• • • •

Later on in the friendship this man had the audacity to question me concerning the nature of my feeling for him, and supplemented his questioning with the statement that his former declaration had been untrue and that we could never be more than friends. I had never wished for us to be other than friends, and I told him so.

• • • •

Don't you think I did the correct thing in breaking off this friendship? And what attitude should I take toward him if we should meet in future? Also, please tell me how I can effect a more friendly relationship with men without appearing too interested. It seems that my motives are always misinterpreted.

PUZZLED.

What to Believe.

DEAR PUZZLED: If you really enjoyed the man's companionship and sincerely wished to be only friends with him, it seems to me you would have been relieved rather than offended to learn he was only fooling when he said he loved you. His candid withdrawal of his one-time statement that he "cared," as well as his audacious queries concerning the state of your feeling for him should have provoked laughter rather than rage. I think you took an unnecessarily serious attitude toward his remarks, both when he said he loved you and when he said he didn't. Which probably explains why you have not known much success in your social dealings with men.

• • • •

The only way not to appear too interested in men is just not to appear too interested, if you know what I mean. Don't worry over trifling aspects and nuances of your relationships with them. When they treat you with marked gallantry, accept their attentions as a matter of course. When their attention cools, act as if you did not notice or care. Never give serious ear or thought to their statements of love unless and until they accompany such declarations with a proposal of marriage, and even then it is wise to pretend you either didn't hear or didn't understand the first time or two.

• • • •

Perhaps you carry your noncommittal attitude to contradictory lengths. It is perfectly possible for a woman to give a man to understand that she finds him the most delightfully companionable, loveable person in the world, without leading him to suppose she wishes to possess him—if she sets about it in a subtle way. It is the reverse of subtlety for her to refuse to admit fondness for a man when she embraces every opportunity for being in his compauy. When the man first told you he loved you, you might have told him quite generously and honestly that you were deeply fond of him, enjoyed his company no end, but that the idea of loving him had just never occurred to you. And when he later withdrew his statement of love, you might have cheerfully congratulated him on his speedy recovery from the recent heart attack and expressed the hope that his coming to his senses need not spoil a rather pleasant friendship. Such an attitude would have clearly demonstrated the fact that you were casting out no matrimonial nets in his direction.

• • • •

If and when you meet this man in future, give him the same pleasant attention you would concede any old beau. In other words, recognize him with a nod, a smile or a friendly glance, and if he responds to that civil overture, talk with him casually about impersonal matters, but make the first move to break away from the meeting.

M. H.

Divorcee's Problem.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: What explanation can be given for a man who devotes three years to persuading a divorced woman to have an affair with him; and then, when he finally wins her consent, decides they had better not go through with it? The man used all the old arguments and persuasions. The girl in question had had a cruel husband. She did not want marriage again, and neither did the man. She wanted his companionship and he said he could not be satisfied with that. He said he wanted her—forever. But he said that when he married he wanted to know definitely that he and his wife were emotionally suited to each other. She saw the logic of his argument, but it was hard for her to agree to the arrangement suggested. But after three years she did consent.

• • • •

She realized suddenly that she did not want him for just a few week-ends, but as a husband; and that her feeling was not so much passion as deep affection. However, no sooner did she decide to meet his terms than he decided not to go through with it. They still care for each other but he makes no attempt to break her already broken resolution to lead a moral life.

• • • •

He is a man of 30, thoroughly experienced with women and life in general, so it is not moral scruples or fear that caused him to change. Could it be that he cares too much to subject her to the social risk? Or could it be that he only thought he wanted her because he thought her unattainable? The girl is very attractive, bright, intelligent and very much in love with him. She is 25.

• • • •

Can things go on like this or will he just bide his time before backing out of the picture? Is this a strange case or is it something that happens often?

AMY.

A Cautious Suitor.

DEAR AMY: I think we may be sure of one thing—and that is that the man's sudden decision not to enter into an affair is not dictated by wholly unselfish consideration for the girl. I think selfishness is dictating caution.

• • • •

I think we may assume one of two things—either that he has suddenly found himself equally interested in another woman, or that he is afraid an affair with this woman might lead to marriage, and that he definitely does not wish to give up his bachelor freedom. You say the girl "suddenly realized she did not want him for just a few week-ends, but as a husband," indicating that she gave her consent to an affair because she hoped and intended that it would pave the way to marriage.

• • • •

Perhaps she admitted in so many words that an affair for her would be a preamble to marriage; or perhaps he guessed it; or perhaps he realized when finally confronted with the complete breakdown of her moral reserve that his potential victory carried with it greater responsibility for another's destiny than he cared to shoulder.

• • • •

The situation probably won't remain static long. The man probably will fade out of the picture eventually, if the girl doesn't walk out of it first. My advice to her is to do just that, after telling him the whole association has been a sorry mistake from start to finish. If by any remote chance he does care deeply for her, he will follow her with a proposal of marriage (providing she has the stamina to hold out for marriage and nothing less), and if he doesn't she will have turned the tables on him by beating him to the exit.

WPA Household Workers' Training Program Is Affording Capital Wives Opportunites for Obtaining Efficient Workers

'Perfect Maid' Trained in Mental Attitude Toward Task.

By Elizabeth Young.

THE TELEPHONE rings at 1114 O street, northwest.

Mrs. Ella N. Putman, like as not, lifts the receiver from the hook. For she is supervisor of WPA's Household Workers' Training program for the District of Columbia which is housed there and hard at her job from morning 'till night. Barely is she out of sight or sound of her telephone.

Into Mrs. Putman's ear is apt to pour an energetic flow of language from one of Washington's better housewives who has heard of the excellent maids this program is training, certifying and placing. The housewife knows what she wants and she doesn't mind asking for it.

"Sometimes you would think she was ordering a peck of potatoes," Mrs. Putman declares. "Either she wants her tall or she wants her thin; or she wants her light and she wants her dark. But then again we get inquiries from housewives who plainly possess the greatest sense of social justice, and these we find easier to please."

Since May, 1936, Mrs. Putman and her staff of workers have (to quote Mrs. Putman) "taken a motley crew of colored girls from Washington families on relief and out of the lot have trained, certified and placed 52 reliable and potentially skilled household workers in suitable positions. This," she says, "is something of an achievement when you relaize that none of these girls was under the slightest obligation to take this eight weeks' course, which operates five days a week from 9 in the morning until 3 in the afternoon. Attendance is purely vlountary, and our present enrollment, which averages 35 girls daily, grew from a meager eight in May."

"Are Taught Attitudes."

The girls are taught attitudes as well as accomplishments. Under the heading of attitudes, they are instructed in the social and professional value of such attributes as honesty, punctuality, regularity in reporting for duty, courtesy and a spirit of willing co-operation. As for accomplishments, they are both taught and practiced in laundering, general cleaning, cooking, serving, and door bell and telephone answering.

"What accomplishment is most difficult to master?" Mrs Putnam was asked.

"Laundering," she promptly replied. "How to get the soiled line out of a cuff, particularly. Nowhere does slipshod work show up so quickly as in laundering. But in instructing a girl in laundering, as in everything else, our whole aim is to acquaint her with acceptable standards of workmanship. We don't promise she won't fall back into slipshod methods, if she has a heavy program or too little time, or if her employer doesn't hold her up to certain standards, but at least she will know when her work is good and when it is poor.

"We give the housewife a trained worker, but we cannot promise her a skilled worker," Mrs. Putman continued. "The trained worker is one who knows how work should be done; the skilled worker is the one who never fails to do it; who automatically does it right the first time and all the time. Skill usually comes after long practise, and the right employer helps the worker develop skill by holding her continuously to a certain standard and making it possible for her to meet that standard."

The school at 1114 O street, soon to be supplemented by another unit in southeast Washington ("where there is a great field for it," according to Mrs. Putman) is run rather on the principle of a girls' dormitory where every girl does her share of the work. Every girl has her turn at answering doorbell and telephone; at preparing and serving meals; at general cleaning and at laundering.

When this reporter was shown over the three-story house, curtains freshly laundered by student maids were being properly hung at first and second-story windows, while in the laundry room an assortment of baby woolens had been meticulously stretched to dry. The kitchen quarters sparkled with pots and pans polished to a high luster. The girl who answered the doorbell was in uniform with perky cap and apron. An indefinable atmosphere of harmonious activity filled the place.

Mrs. Putman receives visitors in a small office on the second floor, from which she directs with pleasant competence the work of staff and students. Mrs. Putman loves her job and brings to it a tremendous amount of enthusiasm, hard work and enlightened understanding of the domestic labor problem in the United States.

Conceding the fact that there never has been and probably never will be a "servant class" in this country in the sense that it has existed in older countries, Mrs. Putman believes the only way to meet the situation is to elevate household employment to a dignified, self-respecting, regulated industry—where employes are adequately paid for service rendered, and have well defined working hours, free time and duties.

Must Create Class.

"We may never have a servant class in this country, but we may have something better—a class of household workers with pride and dignity in their profession," she said. "To bring this about, we must place adequately trained help in the field and we must educate housewives to a more business-like concept of their employer relationship. At the moment, I believe we are emerging into a new setup socially, for which neither the housewife nor the household worker s prepared. Neither sees the other's point of view. What is happening in the domestic field of work parallels, in a way, what is happening in the field of industrial labor, where capital and labor are gradually working toward a better understanding of each other's problems."

As a one-time teacher and a long-time homemaker, well acquainted with standards of gracious living, Mrs. Putman is peculiarly qualified to teach untrained girls in the art of housekeeping. Her present job came to her unexpectedly and, in a measure, unsought—although a recent bereavement had made it necessary for her to think about making her own way professionally. Mary Steel Funkhouser, director of the division of women's and professional projects of the WPA for the District of Columbia, met her last spring and shortly thereafter asked her to head up the household worker's training program for the Washington area.

Putman, above, supervises the WPA's household workers' training program for the District of Columbia, which has trained, certificated and placed 52 girls in suitable positions since May, 1936. The training school for household workers, conducted at 1114 O street northwest, has an average daily attendance of 35 girls, coming from families on relief.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Dec. 4.

ODD THINGS are ery often apt to transpire when our great ladies tangle with the proletariat in Sweet Charity's name, and I never miss such a spectacle if I can help it, having an accursed taste for irony which my parents failed to beat out of me during the formative years. Dragging my frame to the recent opening of a thrift shop dedicated to the welfare of cardiac children, I happened on one of those weird scenes that cause generous-hearted benefactresses to call feebly for the smelling salts and to wonder dimly if it is really worth while.

ALICE HUGHES.

This thrift shop, filled with bargain cast-offs, was at Third avenue and Forty-fifth street, a neighborhood devoted largely to modest tenements and bars and grills. Miss Ethel Merman, shoutin' star of "Red, Hot and Blue," had been billed to open the front door with a big golden key at 2 o'clock, and at that hour housewives of the area were present by the hundred, ready to charge in and scoop up old chinaware, dresses and phonograph records.

By 2:17 the Third avenue ladies were in such a turbulent mood, La Merman not having shown, that gentlemanly Patrolman Gerald Murphy was summoned. He was a mere splinter on the Johnstown flood, and a few minutes later Mrs. Arthur A. Grey, Mrs. Grover Whalen and the rest of the ladies opened the portal and turned loose the muttering mob. Promptly at 2:36 the stage star arrived, having spent a half hour looking for the place without even getting warm.

• • • •

The Third avenue ladies tumbled and messed the merchandise, the Park avenue ladies gave each other tragic glances, also evidence of incipient swoons. It seemed that the cardiac kiddies were going to do all right, but that some of our better matrons would have to go to Nassau for a good long rest. Such things delight me beyond measure. Railroad-track crossing is gorgeously dangerous!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Doris Duke Cromwell, our widely and favorably known richest girl in the world, has just celebrated her twenty-fourth birthday with no pomp. She set off at once for Honolulu, where she is determined to spend most of her time, while her attractive spouse Jimmy stayed here to tie up the loose ends of his business before heading West. They're a quiet, retiring couple.

• • • •

With our Sheila Barrett, ace mimic, now delighting Chicagoans at the Drake Hotel, her spot at Mr. Rockefeller's cloudland saloon, the Rainbow room, has been filled by a pretty Italian singer named Milly Monti. Milly is dripping with personality, and the place has been filled with many of our most social spaghetti-demolishers since her debut. It was at Milly's first night that I saw Bette Davis up there, looking ravishing in a blue damask frock.

• • • •

The theater may not be such-a-much around here any more—this has been a flop season up to now—but it still produces those backstage romances. Only the other day Madelyn Phillips, Massachusetts sassiety girl who reads the prologue to Leslie Howard's "Hamlet," up and married our Schuyler Watts, a young blue blood who worked on the play with Les. Such a nice little couple . . .

• • • •

Well, at last I know the whereabouts of that dear Mr. Alexander Woollcott. He's signed another radio contract, for 13 weeks, and again that dulcet voice will come soothingly over the air waves . . .

• • • •

Now they're peddling a bath thermometer that floats coyly about on top of the water and can be read easily—unless you're splashing too hard. Wouldn't you just adore toying with a bath thermometer in your tub? Such fun!

• • • •

An enterprising local shoe-fancier has lined up a quartet of footwear which he says should see us through the season—if we're careful. It consists of a stout shoe for earnest walking; a shoe to accompany suits and topcoats on shopping tours; a pump for luncheons and afternoon didoes and a gay evening slipper when we step out all sequined up for no good reason. None of the four coats over $4. That still leaves me something for a set of galoshes. How about you?

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

WE'D NEVER known anybody by the name of Jacqueline before, so naturally when a very pretty girl crossed our path with that romantic name, we were much enchanted. Especially when we learned that she had been born and brought up in Japan. She'd never washed a dish or darned a stocking in her life till she married a young lawyer in a typical American town and set up housekeeping without even one maid, instead of the four she'd grown up with.

But she's gotten to be as nice a housekeeper as you'd ever want to know after a lot of struggles in the beginning. She's naturally as domestic as a mother robin, though, which accounts for a lot. She's even learned to sew beautifully with the help of a good electric sewing machine. When we called on her, we were so interested in the way she'd furnished her living room. Except for a few keepsakes, it wasn't in the least Japanese.

When we exclaimed about that she said, "Oh but America is lots more romantic to me than Japan—that's why I wanted my house furnished entirely in colonial mahogany furniture. It seemed so truly expressive of everything that America meant to me as a child when I'd never seen it."

Her rooms were copied as nearly as possible after the rooms she had visited and admired in Williamsburg, Va., where a prominent group is recreating to the minutest degree a distinguished town of colonial America.

The living room has deep brown (called mulberry in Williamsburg) walls and with it she has used yellow, light blue and a chartreuse green.

How to Care for Pets

WHETHER your cat is a silky Persian, a noble Siamese, or just a waif you picked off your doorstep, you want it to be a credit to you.

Even a tattered alley cat becomes a graceful handsome pet you can be proud of with a little easy care.

Proper feeding will do wonders for your pet. Its coat will be soft and glossy—tempting to touch. Its cunning antics and purring contentment will keep you constantly amused.

Two-thirds of your cat's food should be meat—preferably finely cut raw beef. Vary the beef occasionally with cooked lamb, lamb kidneys, chicken, fish that is not too rich and—not more than once a week—raw liver. Nonstarchy vegetables—carrots, spinach, string beans, lettuce—make up the remaining third of the healthy cat's diet. Give your cat a substantial meal morning and evening, at noon a saucer of milk.

Simple easy care will reduce puss's ailments to a minimum. But do you know what to do in case it does fall ill? What is the simplest remedy for hair balls? Worms? Proper treatment for distemper, mange, eczema?

Time Budgeted During Holidays Aid to Beauty

By Carolyn Abbott.

CHRISTMAS SHOPPING and Christmas food should not occupy all of your time between now and the holidays, for if you want to look pretty and fresh for holiday parties, you should budget your time, allowing plenty of it for yourself. Though you are probably tired of hearing it, there really is an important beauty angle to the saying, "Do your shopping early." If you follow this plan you can relax and be fresh for Christmas festivities.

An excellent plan is to do all of your shopping before December 15, from then until December 20, address cards, make out guest lists, decide on menus and order flowers and decorations for the house and from the 20th of December until the 25th, rest.

When your daughter comes home from school, let her find her mother fresh looking and ready to talk to her instead of worn-out and worried about last-minute preparations.

If you are shopping and feel a headache coming, or you are just worn out, stop and rest for awhile or quit your purchasing and head for home. You may not think that you can afford to lose time by resting, but it will not be time wasted for it will save your exchanging the articles bought when you were tired. Also, if you stop when you should, you will not have to spend time trying to erase those wrinkles that such an ordeal will put into your face.

When shopping, be sure to wear simple, comfortable clothes, especially shoes for nothing is worse on a shopping trip than uncomfortable feet.

Of course, you will take time out for lunch, but be sure that you are not too tired to eat. Avoid nervous indigestion by resting for a short while just before eating, then don't swallow each bite whole so that you may hurry back to your duties.

When you come home from this ordeal, for that is what it finally turns out to be, take a good, hot bath and redress completely. This will make you fit for the evening as well as making you a civil person with whom to eat dinner. If you apply your favorite cream to your face and let it remain while you are bathing, your skin will be cleaner and feel fresher than if the cream had been removed. The steam from the bath seems to make its penetrating factors work better.

CHILD CHATS

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

PARADOXICALLY the physically handicapped child frequently has a better chance in a poor family than in a rich one. If he is of low-grade intelligence, so low as to be unable to care for himself, he is generally put in an institution where the environment is suited to his capacity for life.

In the well-to-do household, where there is the possibility of service, he is frequently kept at home, where he leads a useless life and is a constant source of anxiety and often embarrassment to the rest of the family.

The crippled child, too, has a chance for a normal life in a household where there is neither time nor money to give him special treatment. He must learn to mix with others and make his way among others in spite of his deformity.

A handicapped child who has no special treatment often fails to develop the potentialities which are latent in him. But at least he has a happier and more normal life than the child who is cut off from contacts with others. Somewhere between the two extremes there is a happy middle path.

For the low-grade mentality an institution, whether public or private, is undoubtedly best. Such a home is geared to care for the special case. The cripple, the blind or deaf child, even the moron, needs some individual attention and training, but should not be cut off from the world of ordinary activities and made to feel peculiar and an exception.

Such children have the same needs and desires as their more fortunate brothers, and should be given every opportunity to adjust themselves to the world and to life.

Public Hints Help Control Food Market

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 4.—In big, jostling markets that overnight fill and empty with enough of the Nation's produce for the next-day kitchens of New York City, men gamble quietly between midnight and dawn, not alone upon the quicksilver element of price, but upon the taste of 7,000,000 widely assorted people.

To these wholesale markets come the fruits, vegetables and poultry of many a State. It must be bought and sold in the few hours of early morning, dispatched to every outlying section of the city's five boroughs in time for the housewife's early morning call at the retail corner grocery.

By 8 a. m., from the wholesaler's point of view, it's all over for the day; the decisions made in a few crowded hours are irrevocable.

Mrs. Frances Foley Gannon, chief of the division of consumer service of the Department of Markets, tries to keep the city eating regularly and and as inexpensively as possible, told today of the affair of the brown eggs to illustrate how food habits cling.

Millions in New York, she said, seemed to think that only the white egg had everything that could be desired. This mass movement of taste created something of a crisis in brown eggs, so far as the world's biggest single food market was concerned. It pushed white eggs away up in price—10 cents or more a dozen more than brown.

Mrs. Gannon, who remarked that folks in other areas, particularly in New England, were properly quite fond of brown eggs, went to work on the recalcitrant here with the argument that a good brown egg was just as good as a good white egg. Now, she said, the prejudice is being broken down.

LOST and FOUND

A NEW SERIAL BY PRISCILLA WAYNE STARTING

Tomorrow in The Washington Post

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

This is an old, old story—one that has been handled satisfactorily, for the most part, by scores of generations of parents. It relates to the period when the lad begins his adult life and the girl takes on the bloom of womanhood.

Unless parents take the matter in hand children will acquire their knowledge from unreliable and distorted sources. Instead of a wholesome view of the situation there will be built up a sort of mysterious and vicarious thrill that comes from talking about such subjects as, for example, how babies are born.

Youngsters need no longer be regaled with the legend of the stork. With lessons from plants and trees the true circumstances may be brought forth simply and without secrecy. After the bud bursts into flower comes the fertilization of the ovum (the plant egg) with pollen carried by the wind or on the wings, bodies, and legs of insects. With the ripening process the seed is matured and when placed in a suitable environment (the soil) will bring forth a new plant in the likeness of the parent.

When to Instruct.

The birth of puppies or of kittens offers a splendid opportunity for teaching this simple but momentous lesson. We will have but few sex problems if every child is carefully informed as to the nature of reproduction.

What is the best time for instruction? Whenever by the child's questions there is observed a recurring curiosity that must be satisfied. But the explanation must be natural and matter of fact. It is not a solemn occasion but it must be done so gently and cautiously that the child's own instincts will not be aroused. There are thousands of perplexing questions more vital than sex and the less formality with which the talk about life is enshrouded the better. When children realize that plants, animals, birds, and insects present the same steps in development as human beings, sly secrecy to some and horrors to others will be lost.

It is more important, for instance, to direct the child's thinking along proper lines. This may be done by a well selected course of reading, thus inculcating a love of history and of nature, and an appreciation of the lives of great men and women. But reading must not take the place of health building play and sometimes the bookish boy or girl will need to be driven out of doors to mingle with his fellows.

I often wonder why so many brilliant fathers fail to retain influence over their sons or mothers over their daughters. There is such a thing as drawing the curb too tightly, a situation that invites rebellion. "Rig-id disCIPline," as the old schoolmaster called it, is a fine thing in its way but it can weigh far too much.

Citrus Fruit With Waffles and Bacon

For breakfast, the first meal of the day, serve hot waffles and crisp bacon. Accompany these with a citrus fruit entree. Tangerines, split into section with a slice of banana inserted between each section and a red cherry on the top is an interesting variation from the usual sliced or sectioned fruit.

Breakfast Menus Varied With All Types of Fruits

Tangerines Particularly Welcomed by Housewives This Season for Change; They are Plentiful With Prices Low; Suggestions Made for Serving.

By Rebekah Blake.

BREAKFAST, that all-important first meal of the day, is often a problem to many housewives. It is true that this particular meal does not present as many different menu possibilities as lunch or dinner, but if a housewife does a little careful planning she can prevent breakfast from becoming a monotonous repetition of the same foods served morning after morning.

In cold weather, hot breakfasts and heavier foods are popular. In addition to the main foods served at breakfast, as waffles, griddle cakes, eggs and their usual accompaniments such as bacon, ham or sausage, one can add variety to the menu by alternating the type of fresh fruit served. Moreover, the fruit is needed to balance the heavier breakfast menus of winter.

This year's Florida citrus crop is now on the market. The fruits are inexpensive, wonderfully delicious and offer much in nutritional value. Grapefruit, oranges and tangerines act as natural tonics and alkalizers, so important in resisting colds or other infections prevalent at this time of the year. They also serve as a splendid appetizer for any meal of the day.

The tangerine is a citrus fruit that is particularly welcomed by housewives at this season. They are plentiful and their prices are low. They are served without the addition of sugar, because their natural flavor is delicate and sweet. The fruit should be served without breaking the thin protective membrane which holds the shape and prevents exposure of the juice and pulp to the air.

Here are some suggestions for the preparation and serving of tangerines that will cause every member of your family to appreciate more than ever the attractiveness and delicious flavor of the fruit.

Cut from the stem end downward, slash the tangerine rind into eight equal sections. Peel each section back, being careful not to peel it completely free at the base of the tangerine. Remove the excess white membrane from the fruit sections and break them apart enough so that they can easily be removed when served.

Another variation may be prepared by slipping a slice of banana between each loosened section of the tangerine just before serving. Top with a maraschino cherry.

An attractive arrangement of tangerine sections may be had by placing them in a circle on a sprig of green leaves, or a paper doily with a maraschino cherry to garnish the center of the ring.

You may serve plain waffles or, instead of serving country sausage with the waffles, mix the sausage in the batter before baking the cakes. Pecan waffles are also an excellent variation from the plain recipe and are convenient for Sunday night supper or for a supper party snack.

Waffles.

(2 to 3 waffles.)

1 egg
1 cup milk
1¼ cups flour
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 tablespoon butter or margarine, melted.

Break the egg into a mixing bowl or wide-mouthed shallow pitcher; add the milk. Sift the flour, salt and baking powder together over the egg and milk; beat with a rotary beater until the batter is free from lumps. Add the butter and beat until well mixed.

Pour about one-third cup of waffle batter over the heated iron. Close the iron and leave it closed until steam no longer escapes between the two halves. At this point the waffle should be crisp and brown and ready to lift from the iron with a fork. Serve with butter or syrup. May be served as an accompaniment to creamed chicken or creamed mushrooms.

Sausage Waffles.

Sift 1 cup flour with 2 teaspoons baking powder, ½ teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon sugar. Add ⅔ cup milk, 2 egg yolks beaten light and 2 tablespoons melted shortening. Add ½ cup sausage meat separated in small pieces, or sprinkle on each waffle when it is poured into the waffle iron. Fold in 2 eggs whites beaten stiff.

Heat waffle iron, sprinkle with one teaspoon water and when iron stops steaming put in one-quarter of the mixture. Cook until waffle stops steaming and is crisp and brown.

Pecan Waffles.

Sift ½ cup whole wheat flour, ½ cup white flour, 2 teaspoons baking powder, 1 teaspon sugar and ½ teaspoon salt. Add ⅔ cup milk, 1 tablespon molasses, 2 egg yolks and 2 tablespoons melted shortening. Add 1-3 cup pecans cut in pieces and fold in 2 egg whites beaten stiff. Heat waffle iron, sprinkle with 1 teaspoon water and when iron stops steaming put in one-quarter of the mixture. Cook until waffle stops steaming and is crisp and brown. May be served with chocolate sauce.

CHOCOLATE ROLL WITH MARSHMALLOW MINT SAUCE.

Sift 2 tablespoons flour with ½ teaspoon baking powder and ⅛ teaspoon salt. Beat 2 egg whites until stiff but moist and beat in 3 tablespoons sugar. Beat 2 egg yolks until thick and lemon colored, add ½ teaspoon vanilla and beat in 3 tablespoons sugar. Combine mixtures and fold in the dry ingredients, then fold in 1 square chocolate melted over hot water and slightly cooled. Turn into well greased pan measuring 8 inches by 12 inches with wax paper in the bottom. Bake at 400 F. for 12 to 15 minutes. Turn out on a cloth sprinkled generously with powdered sugar, remove wax paper quickly, and with sharp knife remove crusts. Place a piece of wax paper on top of cake and roll quickly, let stand until cold, unroll and spread with whipped cream or ice cream, roll again, sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve cut in diagonal slices with marshmallow mint sauce.

Marshmallow Mint Sauce.

Put in a saucepan ½ cup sugar, ⅛ teaspoon cream of tartar and ¼ cup water, stir until sugar is dissolved and boil to 230 F. Remove from fire, add 6 marshmallows cut in pieces, let stand until marshmallows are melted, then pour slowly over 1 egg white beaten stiff. Add 2 or 3 drops of oil of peppermint and green food color to make a delicate shade.

Post Offers Prizes For Best Recipes On Yuletide Cake

With Christmas approaching, every housewife's thoughts are turning to cake baking. What would Christmas be without cakes—snowy angel food or coconut, luscious caramel or devil's food, rich fruit cakes laden with raisins and nuts?

In the South particularly, cake baking for Christmas is a long-standing custom and for this event unusual and treasured recipes are brought out and tried. If you have any unusual and interesting cake recipes—ones that can always be depended upon—enter them in The Post's contest this week. A prize of $3 will be given for the best recipe, $2 for the second best, and $1 for each of the three runners-up.

Send your recipe—plainly written or typed—to Rebekah Blake, Food Editor, so that it will reach her not later than Saturday morning.

Mushroom Sauce.

To make a mushroom-almond sauce cook ¼ slice onion in 2 tablespoons butter until brown. Remove onion, add 4 tablespoons flour and ½ teaspoon salt and cook until brown. Add meat stock and boil 2 minutes. Add ¼ pound mushroom caps, peeled and sauteed in butter about five minutes. Mix in ¼ cup toasted almonds and serve over hot boiled rice.

Suggestion for Cutting Grapefruit Is Offered

Do you know how to cut a grapefruit without cutting the skin with the meat? Here are some suggestions for this delicate job.

Don't cut out the core and then run a knife around the fruit or you'll eat segment and skin, too, and spoil the flavor at every bite. Instead, remove seeds, but not the core; with a small, sharp knife, loosen fruit segments from peel and separate membranes without cutting through them, so you can scoop out the fruit with a spoon and get only rich, juicy meat.

HE MADE A TEN-YEAR TEST WITH ALL-BRAN

Say good-bye to the headaches, the low spirits, the sleeplessness that often follow common constipation. Just read this letter:

"In 1926, I started using ALL-BRAN. And now, after ten years, during which I have put Kellogg's ALL-BRAN to a long, hard test, I am writing you this letter. It is better to eat this food and be in condition, than to resort to laxatives." —Bernard Altman, 63 Goodale Road, Mattapan, Mass.

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN will help you too. Its "bulk" absorbs moisture within the body, forms a soft mass, gently cleanses the system. Tests prove it is safe and effective.

ALL-BRAN is guaranteed. Try it a week. If not satisfactory, your money will be refunded by the Kellogg Company.

Just eat two tablespoonfuls daily. Either as a cereal, or in recipes. How much better to use this food than to take patent medicines. Buy ALL-BRAN at your grocer's. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek. (Adv.)

Holiday Foods Must Include Quick Rations

The planning of holiday meals should include preparations for those evenings at home when guests just "drop in." It is much better to serve something quickly put together than to make excuses.

Here are some ideas for easy-to-make dishes using ripe olives, that lend a home-prepared air to foods that are found in cans on the pantry shelf.

Open a can of spaghetti and give it personality with small or whole or crunchy ripe olives and a small amount of onion sauted to tenderness in butter.

If your friends especially like toasted cheese sandwiches, accompany these with a well-filled dish of ripe olives. Merely heat them in their own liquor until they reach the boiling point and allow to boil for three or four minutes. Serve in a small serving dish to retain heat as long as possible.

Baked bean and ripe olive loaf is a flavorful meat substitute. Cook together two tablespoons each of minced green sweet pepper and onion in four tablespoons of fat. Combine with with one-half to three-fourths of a cup of sliced ripe olives. Add four cups of mashed baked beans, two eggs, slightly beaten, two cups of crumbs, one cup of cooked tomatoes, salt, pepper, and one-half teaspoon of paprika. Add Worcestershire sauce and garlic salt in discreet amounts, if desired. Serve with a plain tomato sauce or one made rich with minced brown onion and chopped ripe olives.

For a delicious Spanish entree, add three-fourths cup of chopped ripe olives to a regulation-sized can of chili con carne to give the necessary touch. Whole ripe olives may be used.

FAVORITE FOODS of FAMOUS FOLK

By Pattie Ellicott.

WASHINGTONIANS busy with the task of remembering Mrs. Wallis Simpson when she was the wife of Commander Winfield Spencer, U. S. N., and a popular member of the Navy set here, recall that Mrs. Simpson at her entertainments, whether formal or informal, had prepared special dishes to suit the epicurean tastes of her guests.

All the old Maryland recipes were known to her and the Spencer cook was versed in them. One particular dish was associated with Mrs. Simpson's entertainments, especially dinners, when she was in Washington. It was an egg dish and known as custard souffle with sauce.

Fortunate guests rejoiced when this was the dessert after an attractive dinner. It was not too much to imagine that no less a personage than King Edward VIII of England, when he visited Mr. and Mrs. Simpson at their London residence, also had the opportunity to taste this delectable sweet. Here is the way it is made:

Custard Souffle With Sauce.

2 tablespoons melted butter
2 tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons sugar
1 cup milk
4 eggs
¼ teaspoon salt.

Place butter in saucepan, stir in flour and add milk gradually. Cook five minutes, stirring constantly. Add egg yolks, beaten until thick, salt and sugar; mix well and set away to cool. When cold, beat the whites to a stiff froth and fold in. Pour mixture into a buttered pudding dish and bake 30 minutes.

Serve with this sauce:
½ cup butter
4 tablespoons cream
1 cup powdered sugar
4 tablespoons Marsala.

Cream sugar and butter until very light; add Marsala and cream, stirring constantly. Place over hot water and beat sauce until hot and creamy.

Chemists on Road To Synthetic Foods

The development of new synthetic resins, prophetic, it is suggested, of a distant era of synthetic foods, is reported in Industrial and Engineering Chemistry, a publication of the American Chemical Society, by Dr. T. W. Dike, of I. F. Laucks, Inc., Seattle, Wash.

The new resins are produced by the chemical action of zinc chloride in the urea-formaldehyde resin molecule. They bear such striking resemblance to some of the simple proteins, Dr. Dike points out, that "Henry Ford's idea of a synthetic cow may not have been so much a wild dream as a sane prophecy."

"These resins may at present be confined to humble uses, such as adhesives and plastics," Dr. Dike says, "but they suggest ultimate advances to simple amino acids or even proteins."

France Pledged To Aid Britain, Belgium in War

Deputies Informed of Plan to Reduce World Arms Now Ready for League.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Dec. 4.—Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos today promised French military, air and naval aid to Great Britain and Belgium if they are attacked without provocation and at the same time held out the olive branch to Germany and Italy.

He also told the Chamber of Deputies France soon would propose at Geneva "a practical plan for reduction of armaments which will include provisions for publicity on military expenditures and limitation of air forces."

Recalling that Great Britain had pledged to support France in the event of attack for which France was not responsible, Delbos announced:

"I declare similarly that all the forces of France, on land, sea and air, would spontaneously and immediately be used for the defense of Great Britain against unprovoked aggression."

Such help also would be given Belgium, he said.

Democratic nations of the world, Delbos asserted, are unanimously determined "to defend peace with all their energy and force against those who menace it."

France harbors no animosity against any country, however, he added, and hopes for rapprochement with Nazi Germany and improvement of relations with Fascist Italy.

Franco-Italian relations, somewhat strained during the Italo-Ethiopian war, when France applied sanctions, have become less friendly with Italy's completion of a treaty with Germany and her recognition of the Spanish Fascist government. The sympathies of the French Leftist government have been with the Spanish government defenders.

The special object of the French disarmament plan for presentation to the League of Nations would be elimination of "the most immediate and most dangerous possibilities of aggression," the foreign minister declared.

He said it would be addressed to nations outside the League as well as in it.

Maid Is Arrested On Theft Charge Of Senator's Wife

Police yesterday were holding Fay L. Hoffman, 25, of 1805 Belmont street northwest, a maid, who was charged in a warrant by Mrs. Marion M. Clark, wife of the Missouri Senator, with taking $85 worth of groceries from her in the past month.

Mrs. Clark, who lives in the 4900 block of Quebec street northwest, told police her grocer presented her with a bill of $85 when she returned yesterday from a trip with her husband. The groceries, she said, were Clark have been on a vacation since ordered by the maid.

Music Unit Stages Drama on Taylor

"The Last Concerto," a drama in exposition of the life, love and music of S. Coleridge Taylor, by Harriet Gibbs Marshall, was presented last night at Armstrong High School by the Washington Conservatory of Music, under direction of Leonea B. Dudley. The presentation was sponsored by the College Alumnae Club as a benefit for its scholarship fund.

"The Gitanos," early composition of the colored English composer, as part of a prologue by Mme. Lillian Evanti, was sung by a group in Andalusian gypsy costume.

College life was depicted in a studio scene representing the Royal College of Music and the Miner Teachers College Glee Club, directed by Marie James. Armstrong High School Glee Club also participated.

Burleigh's "Deep River," sung by the Howard University Glee Club, was heard in the final scene, preceding rendition of the "Concerto in G Minor" (Taylor), by Irving Lean, violinist. Dancers represented the Mabel Jones Freeman studio. Electrical effects were by Fred Pelham. The program was produced by the special project's committee of the College Alumnae, Helen Louise Sparks, chairman.

U.S. Incorporation Of Firms Studied

By the Associated Press.

Attorney General Cummings said in a statement last night that the Department of Justice was making a "general study" of Federal incorporation of industry.

The question of constitutionality has been raised in connection with an announcement recently by Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, that he would introduce in Congress a bill providing for incorporation under Federal charter of firms operating in interstate commerce.

The bill would let the Government set up minimum wage, maximum hours atnd working condition requirements before granting charters to interstate businesses.

Hitler Youth Enlisted In Hunt for Beechnuts

Berlin, Dec. 4 (AP).—Every German boy and girl tonight was ordered to find all the beechnuts in Germany.

Gen. Hermann Wilhelm Goering, as chief of Hitler's four-year plan for economic rehabilitation of the Reich, instructed the entire Hitler Youth Organization, 6,000,000 strong to comb the forests Saturday and Sunday for beechnuts with which to make cooking oil and relieve the acute fats shortage.

Girl Cured of Sneezing.

Edmonton, Dec. 4 (AP).—Geraldine Spoer, 14, who for 24 days sneezed almost continually, was pronounced cured by doctors today. She was taken home from the hospital and doctors said she would return to school Monday. The girl stopped sneezing last night.

Board Opposes Roosevelt Plan For Registration of Jobless

Expert Federal Statisticians Prefer Count by Regular Census Methods as More Accurate and Presenting More Conclusive Picture.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt's tentative suggestion for registration of the unemployed—rather than a census count of the jobless—was said in informed quarters yesterday to have run up against unanimous opposition in the Central Statistical Board.

Sources close to the board, which is composed of experts, said that while it had not voted any final recommendations, members made it "quite clear" at their last meeting that any system of voluntary registration of jobless would be opposed.

The Central Statistical Board, composed of representatives from the Federal Reserve Board, the Treasury, and other departments, is the Government's chief advisory body on information-gathering activities.

A census of the jobless was advanced by the Commerce Department as the only means of getting an accurate picture of the unemployment problem. It outlined plans for a Nation-wide, door-to-door canvass.

Shortly afterward, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, former NRA administrator, argued this would open the way for "patronage" and urged the count be made by voluntary registration.

Mr. Roosevelt sided with Johnson, saying that a house-to-house canvass might prove too cumbersome and costly and that statistics gathered in such a survey might soon go out of date.

Authoritative sources said that, in discussing "tentative ideas," board members were agreed that self-registration would not give an accurate count.

Some employed might register, it was said, hopeful of bettering their positions. Besides persons dissatisfied with their jobs, housewives and minors seeking work might classify themselves as unemployed.

In addition, it was thought, many unemployed would not register.

Some sources described a house-to-house canvass as "the only practical scheme." For such a survey, it was said, the Census Bureau estimates about 125,000 enumerators would be necessary. The entire undertaking would cost around $16,000,000.

Hope of Peace Lies in Change, Educator Says

Johnstone Asserts Necessity of Accepting Evolution Must Be Recognized.

The hope for world peace lies in the acceptance of the inevitability of change, and realization that relieving economic tension between nations is basic to the achievement of peaceful change, Dean William C. Johnstone, of George Washington University, told the conference of International Relations Clubs yesterday at the University of Delaware, at Newark, Del.

"The prospect of abolishing war does not rest in the building of machinery to preserve the international status quo," Dr. Johnstone said.

Addressing the opening meeting of the two-day conference, attended by representatives of college and university international relations clubs from the Middle Atlantic States, he traced the course of relations between nations from time of the World War to the present day.

"The pre-war nations refused to recognize that change is the inevitable factor of international relations and must be regulated and controlled, if peace is to be," asserted Dr. Johnstone.

"The war ruined the victors as well as the vanquished," he concluded. "It brought ruin, destruction and revolution.

"The issue is plain—change by force is revolution, destruction; peaceful change is evolution and progress."

Sheets Are 'Ticket' To Jewish Benefit

Because the Jewish Foster Home is faced by a shortage of sheets, all guests attending its open house and tea tomorrow afternoon have been asked to bring a sheet or its equivalent. The affair will mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the home.

The open house will last from 2 until 7 o'clock. Heading the receiving line will be I. B. Nordlinger, the past president. He will be assisted by D. J. Kaufman and Simon Lyon, past presidents, the 36 children now in the home and a number of graduates, who will return for the occasion.

Organized by Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith, the Jewish Foster Home has become a refuge for many Jewish boys and girls, most of whom have become successful business men and women after leaving the institution.

Tuberculosis Tests Ordered In High Schools

Ruhland Directs X-Raying of the Seniors at All D. C. Institutions.

Health Officer George C. Ruhland yesterday announced senior classes of the six white and three colored high schools in Washington will be X-rayed next Wednesday to ascertain if any have tuberculosis.

The majority of these students, he said, have been given the tuberculin test, with the consent of their parents, and the positive reactors will be X-rayed. Last year, as well as this year, this case-finding project was financed by the District Tuberculosis Association.

Simultaneously, Dr. Ruhland disclosed the tuberculosis death rate in Washington points to a definite increase in the first ten months of 1936. Up to November 1 there were reported 557 deaths as against 517 for the corresponding period in 1935.

"This increase cannot be explained as due to an increase in the population of Washington," he said, "for, basing it on the new census figures of 819,000 for 1936 as against 594,000 for 1935, there are approximately three more deaths per 100,000."

Dr. Ruhland pointed out that the curve of tuberculosis mortality shows that from birth to 3 years of age the rise is rapid. There is then a definite drop until the age of 13 years is reached, when it starts upward again.

"Although the number of definite tuberculosis cases in this group (the senior classes) is small," he added, "the economic saving to the community by finding a case early far outweighs any argument against this expenditure.

"It is at the end of the graduating year that these students are faced with the problem of readjustment and it is the duty of the District government not only to see that they are mentally equipped to assume their place in the economic set-up, but also to be in physical condition to survive the stress of competition in their respective fields."

Sarga Cuts Foe; Police Stop Duel

Budapest, Dec. 4 (AP).—Dr. Franz Sarga, Hungary's "me-against-nine" duelist, tonight crossed sabers with his third opponent and gashed his adversary's head before police ended the encounter.

Elemer Losonczy, 29, tall and supple government employe, had a 3½-inch cut in his scalp when the police broke down the door of the fencing school, where Sarga and Losonczy clashed, and pinioned Sarga's naked arm.

Sarga, who previously had shot it out in two of the scheduled nine duels he planned in his campaign in defense of "the honor of my wife and our unborn baby," said he was unreconciled.

His account with Losonczy, though a round had been fought, remained to be settled, he said.

Sarga's first saber duel in the series was all over with one serious rush and clash of steel.

Heap Is Silent On Income Tax Fraud Charge

Former Revenue Bureau Aide Pleads Nolo Contendere on Arraignment.

Warren L. Heap, formerly an assistant reviewer in the Internal Revenue Bureau, yesterday in District Court entered a plea of "nolo contendere" when he was arraigned on an indictment charging him with conspiring with Guy S. Burtis, former National Recovery Administration employe, to defraud the Government in connection with a proposed income tax assessment.

The indictment, drawn more than a year ago, alleged Heap and Burtis conspired to advise W. A. Ellis, president of the Amer Mining Co., of Denver, Colo., about an assessment of some $208,000 against the company for its 1932 returns.

Burtis is to be tried December 16, according to George E. McNeil, assistant United States attorney in charge of the case.

McNeil said neither Burtis nor Heap ever actually got in touch with Ellis, though they contacted a Denver, Colo., attorney in an attempt to reach him. The indictment alleges Burtis sent the following telegram to the Denver attorney:

"Don't know whether you understand my name must not be mentioned under any circumstances. If party has already engaged service, we are still needed. There is positively no one who can do what we can."

The plea of "nolo contendere" is construed to mean that the defendant wishes to plead neither guilty nor not guilty, but stands mute.

Franklin National Depositors to Get $250,000 Dividend

A $250,000 Christmas present will be distributed to 17,000 depositors in the former Franklin National Bank starting Tuesday, trustees announced yesterday.

The dividend will represent 25 per cent of the remaining 35 per cent due the depositors. Dividend checks will be distributed at the Departmental Bank Building, 1726 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, from 9 to 5 o'clock on week days and from 9 to 12 on Saturdays.

Checks will be passed out only to those depositors who bring their certificates of participation with them, Samuel M. Thrift, executive officer, emphasized.

With the forthcoming dividend, depositors will have salvaged 82½ per cent of their deposits and the trustees are hopeful of eventually paying all claims in full, Thrift said.

Bar Heads Back Claims Court Plan

Proposals for establishment of a small claims court in the District were approved in principle yesterday by the board of directors of the District Bar Association.

The board, it was learned, recommended several changes in the small courts plan originally proposed by Judge Nathan Cayton of Municipal Court. Judge Cayton suggested the court be employed to settle cases involving $50 or less.

The report of the board will be distributed to the association membership within the next few days and will be called up for formal action at a meeting January 26.

Club Votes to Keep People's Counsel

Meeting in the Joseph R. Keene School, the Chillum Heights Citizens Association last night adopted a resolution asking retention of the office of people's counsel and recommending William McK. Clayton for the post.

A recommendation was approved that all employes engaged in handling food in District cafes and restaurants be compelled to take periodic medical examinations. The proposed eight-hour day for firemen also was indorsed.

O'Connor Bloc Hits Meddling In House Fight

Backers Charge Senators With Interference in Leadership Race.

Militant supporters of Representative O'Connor, fired new blasts yesterday against the injection of what they termed "Senatorial interference" and "blackjack tactics" into the House majority leadership contest.

Their charges drew an immediate retort that O'Connor had been soliciting Senatorial aid. In support of that contention, Representative Vinson (Democrat), Kentucky, managing the campaign of Representative Rayburn (Democrat), Texas, made public a letter written by O'Connor to Senator Clark (Democrat), Missouri.

Less than 24 hours after the numerically powerful Pennsylvania Democratic delegation, at a caucus attended by Senator Guffey (Democrat), Pennsylvania, had voted to support Rayburn, this statement was issued by Representative Clark (Democrat), Idaho, an O'Connor man:

"I think that the blackjack tactics of certain Senators in attempting to elect the majority floor leader of the House will be keenly resented by the House membership."

Clark did not identify the Senators to whom he referred.

Interference Assailed.

Earlier, Representative Dingell (Democrat), Michigan, criticized the "interference of Senate members" in House organization affairs and predicted O'Connor would get the votes of at least seven of the eight Michigan Democrats.

"No Senator, or Governor, is going to tell me how to vote on the selection of a leader," Dingell said.

In making public O'Connor's letter asking for support of Senator Clark and the Missouri delegation in the House, Vinson said:

"We don't see why there should be such a hullaballoo about Rayburn getting the support of the Vice President or Senators. We don't think O'Connor's efforts to obtain Senatorial support constitutes blackjack tactics. It's perfectly proper."

O'Connor Admits Move.

O'Connor readily told newsmen he had sought the help of a number of Senate friends.

"Most of them replied they would not presume to intefere in their delegations," O'Connor said. "I don't know any State in the Union where a Senator would presume to interfere with members of the House, except Pennsylvania."

Rayburn offered no comment on the Senate-House aspects of the contest. He said, however, he would have the votes of four or five Iowa members, was "figuring" on the two Kansas Democrats and expected the entire California Democratic bloc to support him.

Jobs of 500 Czechs Hinge on Coronation

Praha, Czechoslovakia, Dec. 4 (AP).—Some 500 glass and jewelry artisans in Gablonz and Eisenbrod, employed to make monograms "E. R. VIII" for the scheduled coronation of Britain's King Edward VIII next May, anxiously watched events in London tonight to see whether they would still have jobs on the morrow. Their orders already have been partly filled.

Pastor Denied Strikers.

Glewitz, Polish Upper Silesia, Dec. 4 (AP).—More than 600 miners on the second day of their Subterranean hunger strike in the mine shaft tonight asked for a clergyman to be sent to conduct religious services for them. Their request was not granted. A crowd of women stormed the pithead for the second time today, but was dispersed by police.

2 Seized Here In 'Typewriter Ring' Charges

Freedmen's Hospital Nurse and Man Held in Sales to Pawnbrokers.

Operation of what is believed to be a "typewriter racket ring" was uncovered yesterday when police announced they had arrested a 30-year-old colored nurse, and a colored man who may be responsible for the disappearance of nearly 100 typewriters here in the past year.

Arrested two days ago by Detective Sergeants Frank O. Brass and J. K. Baker, the two have already been found responsible for 17 missing typewriters, police claim. Another accomplice, also colored, is expected to be arrested by police in a "few days."

The "racket," police said is simple, but proved effective. Machines owned by four firms have been recovered in pawn shops in nearby Maryland and Virginia.

The members of the ring, they said, would pay an installment of $4.50 on an expensive portable machine and immediately carry it to a pawn shop, where they sold it for $20. In at least four cases the typewriter thieves used their own names.

Becoming suspicious of the couple, a broker just across the Potomac River in Rosslyn, Va., notified police. It was through this tip that the man and woman were picked up.

In the past several months, police said, numerous typewriters have disappeared in this way and through downtown burglaries.

In the office cases only typing machines were taken. Other valuables lying about were not touched, they said.

The nurse, Clara Lee Peyton, of Freedmen's Hospital, has been charged with larceny after trust of $52.50 by one typewriter firm. She will be held, police said, until investigation is made of similar cases.

The Federal Diary

By Samuel Lubell.

Coins

Theodore T. Belote, the Smithsonian Institution's curator of coins, was showing us around the institution's matchless collection—we were trying to prepare for the Smithsonian-Office of Education broadcast on the subject tomorrow morning—when one of the city's sightseeing guides bristled up to us.

The guide had left his flock of tourists some feet away and seemed to be trying to get in a few last minutes of preparation. He didn't know who Belote was, but shouted evidently in great disappointment:

"Oh, they don't keep the coins according to value, do they?" And before Belote could answer, fired away with a "There's no Maundy money here, is there?"

When Belote, a bit angry, pointed out the Maundy money the guide waved his hand to the group he was showing around and then with the same blithe disregard with which he had questioned us began rattling off his spiel about the Maundy coins. As we moved away, Belote's face turned red, for we could hear the stories the guide was telling—stories which only a few minutes ago Belote had branded as typical bits of rot told people by guides.

The Smithsonian's coin collection is unusual in that it's the one museum exhibit we've run into that made us feel philosophic. It probably was because of the tremendous similarity between all coins, indicating that money is one of the great common denominators of all civilizations, and the abounding evidence of another universal trait of men and governments—secretly to lighten the weight of their coins by substituting alloys for gold and silver.

Walsh Again

We hate to bring this up again—that picture of Assistant FHA Administrator Arthur Walsh alongside of the giant sailfish seemed to have settled the whole business so satisfactorily—but our Fort Lauderdale, Fla., correspondent has sent us another one of his baffling and unreliable bulletins, and now we don't know what to think.

"The battle is over," writes our correspondent (incidentally it will do your heart good to know that we fired him by return mail).

"The fish leaping high and seeing Walsh shrunken to a wisp after eight days of frantic battling laughed and packed and departed for Bimini—but only after leaving a new record of eight days six minutes and four seconds for losing a marlin. The denizen weighed slightly over 413 pounds—Walsh less than 50."

(Ed. note.—Regarding the reports of Walsh's battle with the sailfish, we can't help but feel that all too innocently the Federal Diary has gotten its hooks into a real whopper (sailfish or Walsh, we don't know) and just hasn't been able to let go since. Maybe we ought to be reporting our "fish" battle not Walsh's.)

Coincidences are always interesting in this much too publicized world. On the heels of the District department's decision to bless the proposal for a Government athletic union of all A. F. G. Science Finds 1,000-Year-Old Jaguar Throne

Photos Copyrighted by the National Geographic Society.

In this ancient Mayan pyramid in the Mexican province of Yucatan, Mexican scientists have discovered another, still older pyramid, which yielded the 10-century-old throne of a Maya king. Below is the famous jaguar throne of the great monarch who held sway back in the mists of time.

First photographs to be shown in color of the gorgeous "Jaguar Throne" of a Maya Indian kingdom of 1,000 years ago, described as "the most spectacular and important single specimen from the life of ancient America ever found," were exhibited last night during a lecture before the National Geographic Society by Dr. Sylvanus Morley, noted archeologist.

The "Jaguar Throne" was occupied by the ruler of the pre-Columbian Maya city-state of Chichen-Itza in what is now Yucatan, Mexico. The magnificent stone ruins of the city, lost for centuries and overgrown with jungle, now are being cleared, reconstructed and studied by archeologists of the Mexican government and the Carnegie Institution of Washington, with which Dr. Morley is associated.

Mexican archeologists found the throne last August and it has been kept since then under careful guard in its original position in a long-hidden temple.

The throne itself is a life-size jaguar carved in limestone, and painted a gorgeous Mandarin red with 73 spots of apple-green jade, each spot being one and one-quarter inches in diameter and set into the stone. The eyes are made of two half-spheres of similar jade. The back of the jaguar is flattened and decorated with a design containing scores of pieces of blue turquoise.

The throne was discovered in its original position in a temple on top of a pyramid, all of which had been completely covered by a larger pyramid, surmounted by a second temple. Though it was made and used about the year 1,000 A. D., 500 years before Columbus discovered America, the throne is in practically perfect condition.

It was occupied, said Dr. Morley, by a ruler who combined the functions of king and high priest, and who governed not only the city of Chichen-Itza but probably also a considerable area of the surrounding territory.

The throne was found by Mexican archeologists of the Direction of Prehispanic Monuments under Senor Ignacio Marquina, this department being a branch of the Department of Monuments in charge of Senor Alfonso Toro, which is in turn a division of the Ministry of Public Education.

Almost as interesting as the throne itself was the method of its discovery. The Mexican archeologists tunneled into the side of the great pyramid at Chichen-Itza, named "El Castillo" by the Spaniards, and found under it the second and older pyramid. Tunneling up its side they came upon the concealed temple containing the throne.

Dr. Morley, in his illustrated lecture, described the work of the Carnegie Institution in reconstructing the life of the ancient Maya, who developed in Honduras, Guatemala and the Yucatan peninsula the highest civilization attained by the American Indian.

Bond Racket Grand Jury To Reconvene

Judge Mattingly Orders Prince Georges Inquiry to Be Resumed.

The Prince Georges County grand jury will return to Upper Marlboro, Md., next Wednesday to hear charges of conspiracy, extortion and malfeasance against certain members of the Hyattsville police sub-station, a bondsman and a justice of the peace.

The order reconvening the grand jury, recessed last month after a hasty consideration of evidence purporting to disclose a lucrative police-bonding racket in Prince Georges County, was signed yesterday by Judge of the Circuit Court Joseph C. Mattingly.

Summonses were issued immediately with orders to deliver them personally.

Ogle Marbury, lawyer, of Laurel, Md., who has been appointed special prosecutor by the court, said last night he already had drawn up a number of indictments which the jurors might return. He declined to say, however, how many true bills would be sought.

Presentation of the case will be made to the grand jury by States Attorney Alan Bowie. Under the State law, a special prosecutor is forbidden to go before the jury.

To Handle Prosecution.

If indictments are returned, however, Marbury is expected to handle the bulk of the prosecution in court.

The expose of alleged corrupt practices involving a justice of the peace, a bondsman and members of the police force began October 20.

torney, of Mount Rainier, and Walter Newrath, of the Keystone Automobile Club, went before the grand jury with a number of affidavits from Washington motorists who alleged they had been victimized in a purported "bargain-fine system."

After a preliminary investigation, the grand jury adjourned with recommendations that a special assistant be appointed to aid Bowie in preparing evidence for a special session to conduct a "thorough" probe of the charges.

Commissioners Refuse.

Meanwhile the county commissioners were called upon by the Keystone Automobile Club and by a number of civic organizations to sponsor an administrative investigation of the police. This the commissioners refused to do, holding that it would be encroaching upon the territory of the grand jury.

The commissioners, however, did take action against three members of the police department, suspending them without pay pending the jury's investigation.

The officers were Warren E. Peake, Claude A. Reese and Frank Bell. Although each was given an opportunity to appear before the board to defend himself, none has requested a hearing.

When the grand jury reconvenes Wednesday, it also will be asked to consider nine minor cases which either were not disposed of during the October term or have come up since then.

Whether the jury will be asked to consider the celebrated Corinna Loring murder case again, Bowie declined to say.

If the case does come under the purview of the jurors, however, it is a foregone conclusion that an indictment will be returned.

Hazen Again Seeks Junior HighBuilding

Jefferson School Site at $192,531 Still Is in Controversy.

Hoover Playground and Farmers' Market Lots Are Rejected.

The District Commissioners yesterday made another move to acquire a site for the proposed Jefferson Junior High School, which has been involved in a controversy for the last six years, by requesting the Budget Bureau to include a reappropriation of nearly $200,000 for acquisition of a site.

The recommendation does not involve a new appropriation, Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen explained; neither does it mean that the District necessarily will purchase the long-disputed site in the Southwest.

"We just want to have the money available," he said, "so that we can negotiate for a site with the realization that we can pay any reasonable amount that is agreed upon."

$192,531.27 Involved.

The specific request made by Hazen was that the Budget Bureau include in the 1938 District budget a provision that the unexpended balance of a $200,000 appropriation carried in the 1932 act for the erection of the school building be reappropriated but with the authorization changed so that it may be used to acquire a site. The amount involved is $192,531.27, the remainder having been spent for the preparation of plans and specifications.

In making the proposal, Hazen rejected suggestions that the Hoover Playground or the Farmers Market, in Southwest Washington, be used.

"The Commissioners have given careful consideration to both of these suggestions and feel that they cannot approve either one," he said in letter to Daniel W. Bell, Acting Budget Director.

"The Southwest section of the city unquestionably would vigorously oppose transferring the Hoover Playground site for a new Jefferson Junior High School, and the Farmers Market, by reason of the surrounding conditions, is not well located for a school building site.

Wants Definite Action.

"The Commissioners are very much concerned with respect to the Jefferson Junior High School matter, and feel that some definite action should be taken toward acquiring the necessary site.

"Apparently it is not possible to complete the site which has been partially acquired, because of opposition all along the line to the payment of the consideration demanded by the property owner.

"The Commissioners are informed by their legal counsel that they cannot institute condemnation proceedings for completing this site, and that even though Congress should pass new legislation providing specifically for the condemnation of the unacquired part of this site it is doubtful whether such legislation would be held by the courts to be valid."

Johnson & Wimsatt, Inc., is the owner of the property which the Commissioners have been negotiating for over the last six years.

Santa, Liquor Ads Must Be Divorced, D. C. Board Warns

Santa Claus must ride the water wagon until he hitches up his reindeer and proceeds soberly about his business, the District Alcoholic Beverage Control Board warned local liquor dealers yesterday.

The board instructed liquor dealers to keep Santa out of their stores and their window displays so that minors would not confuse the Christmas spirit with any other spirits.

"We really are appealing to the liquor industry for reasonable cooperation out of interest in the children," the board's statement said. Dealers are forbidden by law to sell to minors. We do not want dealers to indulge in advertising appeals which might induce minors to attempt to buy liquor."

Leads Crusade for Civil Service Reform

Civil Service Reform Leader Declares 'Fight Not Hopeless'

Jaded advocates of civil service reform returned to their crusade with new enthusiasm yesterday after a dynamic young businessman on a whirlwind sweep of the city convinced them the battle is not half so hopeless as it had seemed.

"The people just don't realize the seriousness of the problem," declared Robert L. Johnson in his new role as president of the National Civil Service Reform League.

His eyes alight with the joy of tackling big problems under tremendous difficulties—a trait which struck fear into the hearts of patronage-seeking politicians in Pennsylvania and earned him the wholesome respect of business rivals—Johnson continued:

"There are 3,000,000 public servants in this country and 2,000,000 of them are appointed, not on the basis of their efficiency, but as a reward for political service.

"There are over 3,000 counties but only five have governments based on the merit system."

To Stir Public Interest.

Johnson declared that the big problem of the league is to awaken public interest in civil service reform. With the imagination that brought him the vice presidency in charge of advertising of the various Time, Inc., publications, Johnson outlined his program.

When Johnson completed outlining his program at a luncheon tendered by American University's School of Public Affairs, Morris L. Cooke, REA administrator, grabbed H. Eliot Kaplan, executive secretary of the league, by the shoulder and exclaimed:

"I quit your organization 20 years ago because of its inaction. But put me back on your mailing list. I'm with you again."

Johnson explained that the league could not operate without funds to carry on its education program. One of the first objectives of his administration, Johnson said, will be to launch a Nation-wide fund collection campaign.

Already a speakers bureau is being formed, Johnson said. A program of co-operation with Kiwanis, Lions, Rotary and similar organizations interested in good government has been mapped out. Special efforts will be made to enlist high school educators in the crusade and to establish chapters of the league in every university and college in the country.

Will Seek Protection.

In the next session of Congress, Johnson said, the league will concentrate on obtaining support for a Constitutional amendment safeguarding the Federal Civil Service from future raids.

"We want a law that cannot be amended by legislative riders in a few years," he explained.

Supremely confident the league can achieve its goal, Johnson made it clear he was not blinded by overconfidence in mapping out his program.

"We know this can't be accomplished in one or two years," Johnson said, "but we can make a good start toward educating the people and arousing their interest."

Johnson's interest in efficient Government personnel was awakened late in 1934 when he was drafted by Gov. Earle of Pennsylvania to take charge of the State's relief administration.

"I knew that we would have to have good personnel and that we could not get it on the basis of political patronage," grinned the smoothed-faced young executive. "We were put under all kinds of pressure, but we set up our own personnel administration and selected our employes on the basis of merit alone."

State and Federal executives, Johnson said, are forced by political pressure to devote half their time to personnel problems which should be handled by a commission solely interested in merit.

Remembers Lesson.

When he returned to the publishing business early this year, Johnson said, he remembered the lessons he had learned in his first contact with Government personnel and decided that it was his duty as a private citizen to take a keener interest in the efficient operation of his Government.

While he was relief administrator of Pennsylvania, Johnson, whose hair is turning gray, although he is not yet 40, spent $20,000,000 a month through 14,000 employes in 670 branch offices.

As he rushed off to catch a midnight train, a reporter called, "What do you think of life in Washington?"

Chuckling, Johnson replied:

"Thanks to our advertising campaign in The Washington Post, sales of 'Life' in Washington are exceeding our expectations 100 per cent."

In addition to his manifold duties with Time and Fortune magazines, Johnson is charged with developing the new baby of Time, Inc., the fast-growing picture magazine, Life.

Nolan Guilty; Faces Term Of 1-5 Years

Jury Out 8½ Hours in Case Growing From Divorce Action.

Kearney Enters Plea of 'Nolle Contendere' on Companion Charge.

After deliberating for eight and one-half hours, a jury of five women and seven men last night in District Supreme Court, convicted William J. Nolan, local automobile dealer, of bribery.

Nolan, charged with bribing two witnesses in his wife's divorce case almost two years ago, accepted the jury's verdict calmly. He was taken to the District Jail when Justice James M. Proctor ordered the $1,000 bond, on which he has been at liberty, set aside.

Defense Attorneys Rudolph Yeatman and George D. Horning announced they will file an apepal for a new trial next week.

In summing up the case for the prosecution, Assistant United States District Attorneys Walter M. Shea and John W. Fihelly urged the jury to convict, arguing that he was the only person who had any interest in bribing witnesses to leave the city before his wife's case could be tried.

Francis M. Kearney, formerly a business associate of Nolan's, accused of giving Charles and Mattie Young, both colored, $50 and two automobile tires to leave Washington so they could not be called at the divorce trial, entered a plea of "Nollo contendere" when he was arraigned on a bribery charge.

The courts have held that such a plea is tantamount to a plea of guilty and Kearney was ordered to stand aside while a probation officer investigates his case.

Horning argued with the jury to disregard the testimony of Kearney and Young, claiming they had been discredited by their own testimony and that of other witnesses.

Shea insisted that Kearney could not have given any money to the Youngs without Nolan's knowledge.

A one to five year sentence may be imposed for bribely in the District.

For Grown-ups As Well As Children

One doctor says of milk: "It is the best kind of a 'shock absorber' for the grown-up . . . Milk supplements a diet that may be deficient in one or more respects, so the practice of using at least a pint of milk daily in the diet of the adult is a most excellent thing from the standpoint of maintaining good health."

In Hollywood With Jimmy Fiddler

Studio Gate Flotsam.

HOLLYWOOD, DEC. 4.

O. Henry soliloquized, in his famous stories, on twisted types of humanity to be found in New York's darker corners. I would like to have him join me for a few minutes outside a studio gate. The gate is like a huge plate-glass window which separates a ragged urchin from a toy display, a hungry man from a piping hot roast, a woman from a much desired hat. Inside is so near, yet so very very far.

MARLENE DIETRICH.

Fred MacMurray and I sat in his car outside the Paramount Studio entrance a few mornings ago. The hour was early, the sun was still struggling to climb above houses and tree tops. Even so, 100 loiterers were on hand.

Director Al Green told me this story. It is about an actor who is a notorious drunkard. He has been kicked out of a dozen movies, but somehow has talked his way into Green's new cast. Every day he came on the set, staggering, and each time Al sent him home. At last the director's patience ended, and he informed the actor that he was out of a job.

"Aw, you can't do this to me," pleaded the actor. "It's not my fault.' I'm a hereditary dipsomaniac." "Oh, yeah!" barked Green. "From which of your parents?" "My step-father," answered the liquor-soaked actor, and Al gave the guy another chance."

Private irks: That oh-so-weary-of-being stared expression Marlene Dietrich wears. (She won't be stared at so often, now that Madeleine Carroll is around.)

While in Europe, Edward G. Robinson saw an electric shoe-shiner that so impressed him he sent one to a Hollywood friend. This friend gleefully tried the apparatus the day it arrived. It not only blew out every fuse in the house, but so deranged the wiring system that the workmen have practically taken down the walls to make necessary repairs.

Laurel and Hardy Play Selves Twice In Amusing Comedy on Capitol Screen

Competent Comedy Cast Is Filmed in Support of Hal Roach Co-Stars.

"OUR RELATIONS." Hal Roach picturization for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer distribution of a story by W. W. Jacobs, adapted to the screen by Richard Connell and Felix Adler, starring Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy, with Daphne Pollard, Sidney Toler, Jimmy Finlayson, Iris Adrian, Lona Andre, Alan Hale, Arthur Housman, Ralfe Harolde and Noel Madison. Directed by Harry Lachman. Reviewed at Loew's Capitol Theater Friday afternoon.

The twin motif, as a comedy device, has been employed in this subject with rather less confusion than usually results from an attempt to make two comedians play four parts. "Our Relations" happen to be twin brothers of Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy known by the names of Alf and Bert, long since supposed to have been hanged for a few minor indiscretions, but actually alive and kicking, aboard a tramp steamer that puts into port just as Stan and Ollie are attempting to mollify their irate wives and get out of the dog house, as the current patois of the streets has it.

BELL.

The two lusty sailors and the two penitent husbands clash in a variety of places and circumstances and the lives of all four become slightly less than completely placid. The law enters now and then, there is an outraged sea captain, who has a valuable pearl ring as a stake in the goings-on; there are the wives who wouldn't believe their husbands on a bet; a tough bruiser who serves drinks in a beer garden and likes to hit people on the head with a mallet; a casual drunk, who complicates matters by his presence at the most inopportune times, and all of the other ingredients of the sort of ribald comedy that Mack Sennett used to manufacture in carload lots and Hal Roach now seems to have taken over.

Situations Are Funny.

"Our Relations" is funny—make no mistake about that. It is not the funniest nor the best balanced feature-length comedy Laurel and Hardy have made, but it will do until something more ludicrous comes along.

One distinct advantage this picture possesses is that it did not attempt to befuddle the audience's mind with a surplusage of double-exposure scenes in which Laurel and Hardy might have extensive colloquies with Laurel and Hardy. The ramifications of a fairly clever plot have been accommodated by the deft alternation of scene sequences in which the stars play both themselves and their twins, but alternately, instead of concurrently, as the judge says in passing sentence.

I confess to being one who admires the complacent buffoonery of Laurel and Hardy. To my mind they have mastered the art of timing beyond any other comedy team before the cameras and microphones. The pathetic Mr. Laurel is here, perhaps, more pathetic than ever, and the rotund Mr. Hardy as discreetly composed as he ever has been. They are supported by a cast long inured to the custard-pie demands of this sort of slapstick humor. Birthday cakes are slapped around, more or less, during the action of the picture and many of the scenes are more mussy than not, but there is a robust and rollicking humor about the whole affair that takes the curse off, so far as this concern is concerned.

Jimmy Finlayson has been doing this sort of business since a time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, and Sidney Toler, although an actor of more substantial fiber, fits into the picture nicely as the sea captain. Alan Hale is sufficiently bulky to make a fine waiter-bouncer. Daphne Pollard, Betty Healy, Iris Adrian and Lona Andre comprise a competent supporting cast.

An Ethel Waters Triumph.

On the stage at the Capitol this week, Lucky Millinder and His Mills Blue Rhythm Orchestra make more noise than music, but tone down their activities enough to make it possible for Ethel Waters, foremost songstress of her race, to score the same sort of unequivocal hit she always registers before Washington audiences. With such songs as "Dinah," "Ain't Gonna Sin No More," the ballad about "Ed. the Fixer," "Stormy Weather"—which she sings better than anybody else in the world—and "Miss Otis Regrets," Miss Waters walks off with the audience tucked safely under her arm.

Others on the all-sepia revue program include the Four Step Brothers, tap dancers of the first rank; Conway and Parks, singing dancers, who do a double that wows the crowd, and Chuck Richards a vocalist with a mellow voice that lends itself perfectly to such things as a special arrangement of "Trees," and the like.

Phil Lampkin's medley overture of familiar Irish airs, a new issue of the Fox Movietone News and the customary house features round out a program that will exert a strong appeal to those who feel that the time has come in the lives of mice and men when a little laughter and a complete emancipation from the serious concerns of life will not be amiss.

But the greatest of all these divergent considerations is Ethel Waters—let nobody tell you different.

"LOVE ON THE RUN." M-G-M picturization of a story by Alan Greene and Julian Brodie, adapted by John Lee Mahin, Manuel Seff and Gladys Hurlbut, starring Joan Crawford and Clark Gable, supported by Franchot Tone, Mona Barrie and Reginald Owen. Directed by Woody S. Van Dyke. Reviewed second week by Dorothea Lewis.

This is probably the season's silliest picture, but it is harmless and rather disarmingly inane.

Mike and Barney are two utterly unbelievable foreign correspondents; Mike, too, too smart; Barney terrifically dumb. Into their story-hungry arms rushes one Sally Parker, runaway rich girl who just hates reporters!

Throw in a stolen airplane, a troupe of spies, a state secret, a night in Mme. de Maintenon's bedroom, a nonexistent pet dog, lots of dressing up in fancy clothes and you may have some idea of what it is all about. And then again, quite understandably, you may not. Anyhow, it's funny.

Clark Gable as Mike, Joan Crawford, as Sally, and Franchot Tone, as Barney, probably had a deal of fun. Certainly they did not have to bother about acting. The trio succeed in being natural and more or less spontaneous in situations bearing the marks of ages.

Joan looks particularly pretty and much more at home than she was as that gorgeous hussy. Franchot's comedy timing is swell but he goes in for some strange face-making. Gable is pleasant.

Incidentally William Demarest scores in it as the year's worst managing editor.

An M-G-M Crime-Doesn't-Pay short, entitled "Foolproof," an orgy of color in a most untimely cartoon, "To Spring," and the first newsreel to discuss the King and his lady complete the hold-over bill.

Columbia

"TARZAN ESCAPES." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story suggested by the characters created by Edgar Rice Burroughs, adapted to the screen by Cyril Hume, costarring Johnny Weissmuller and Maureen O'Sullivan, with Benita Hume, John Buckler, Herbert Mundin, E. E. Clive, Darby Jones and William Henry. Directed by Richard Thorpe. Review Friday afternoon (repeat engagement) by Sally Stroud.

Magnificent-torsoed Tarzan shares honors in his newest tree-looping venture. Cheeta, the co-star, runs the gamut of the emotions from anger to derision, including love. Zebra-riding, house-maiding and bronx-cheering are among her accomplishments.

Cheeta is an ape, taught parlor tricks by Tarzan's mate, Jane, whom he abducted from civilization several episodes ago. Jane has installed plumbing and elevator and fan service in the home she shares with the apeman of the African jungles.

Satan comes to Eden in the form of a wild-game collector, a rascal with a moustache and evil intentions of caging Tarzan for exhibition. He guides Jane's two cousins to the jungle paradise so they may try to persuade Jane to return to England to claim an inheritance.

To the clamorous relief of the audience, he perishes, like a coward, in a den of man-eating lizards, after duly exciting adventures have been experienced by Tarzan and company.

Cheeta is almost the heroine. She challenges the scenic appeal of the wild country, the war dances of pagan savages, Tarzan's chilling call to the wild and the comic mugging of Herbert Mundin, who is the villian's valet.

It might be interesting for you, should you be a grownup who as a child, read Edgar Rice Burroughs' full series about Tarzan, to see if you can recapture the breathless thrill you no doubt experienced then. But don't try any stunts on the clothes-line.

That wild-eyed child with the freckles cheerfully murders "Trees" with his vocalizing in an Our Gang comedy. In which he is abetted by Spanky and two midgets.

Hearst's newsreel shows King Edward at South Wales, F. D. R. at Port of Spain, and the funeral of Roger Salengro in Paris.

Metropolitan

"THREE MEN ON A HORSE." First National picturization of the play by Holm and Abbott, as produced by Alex Yokel, featuring Frank McHugh, Joan Blondell, Sam Levine, Teddy Hart, Paul Harvey, Carol Hughes, Allan Jenkins, Guy Kibbee, Edgar Kennedy and Eddie Anderson. Directed by Mervyn LeRoy. Reviewed Friday afternoon (return engagement) by W. A. Whitney.

From the outstanding comedy hit of its theatrical season has been made a lusty, laugh-packed comedy. "Three Men on a Horse" is no less the hit in its screen version than it was on the living stage, and where the former deviates from the latter it is only to add greater effects than were earlier possible in the so-called legitimate theater.

A cast expertly selected turns in performances which draw from every situation the maximum effects. Topping the list, of course, would be Frank McHugh, as the meek verse writer, whose hobby is picking winning bangtails. Then come Joan Blondell, Frank Levine and Teddy Hart, as the trio into whose hands this wizard dopester inadvertently falls.

Merely to recount the others is to recommend their performances: Paul Harvey, as the brother-in-law; Carol Hughes, as the wife; Guy Kibbee, as the greeting card manufacturer, and Edgar Kennedy, as the bartender.

The program is augmented by "Can't Think of It," a good comedy with Ken Murray and "Oh, Yeah" Oswald and the combined releases of the Paramount and Universal News reels.

Cue and Curtain

"SEE NAPLES AND DIE." The Cue and Curtain of George Washington University presents this comedy-drama in three acts by Elmer Rice, staged by Marvin Beers, with stage setting by Les Marzolf. At the Wardman Park Theater, December 4 and 5. Reviewed Friday evening by W. A. Whitney.

Continuing the good work, which earlier saw its best in "Is Life Worth Living," the Cue and Curtain of George Washington University last evening presented Elmer Rice's "See Naples and Die."

As commendably as they read their assignments, the players labored under a handicap not of their own making, for into this fabrication of snappy dialogue Mr. Rice failed somewhat in providing a sufficient raison d'etre for the lines and the action.

Efforts are made to explain things, yet no one ever seems to get around to espousing completely the cause of letting the audience in on what was apparently near, if not actual, tragedy. And even when an "unreasoning" husband is finally assassinated (probably that the play might end), the onlookers were hardly any the wiser.

Notwithstanding the authorial shortcomings, the players gave the play sparkle and movement quite beyond its intrinsic merit, for which achievement Director Marvin Beers may be applauded in no uncertain terms.

Of the players Peggy Gusack, as the center of most of the reverberations, and Hamilton Coit, as her prince-husband, finely read their parts, with Marilyn Miller, as the "second choice" of Charles McVicker, as the disappointed youth (later reconciled), and Betty Emerson, as the native allurement, coming in close second.

The other players, in smaller parts, had nicely turned bits from time to time, especially George Carter, as an Englishman; John Kendrick, as the prince's aide; Maxine Mitchell, as Miss Gusack's sister; Joseph Klein and Norman Stein, as the dark mysterious chess players. Completing the roster were Harold Dorsett, Ruth Brewer, Mary Stuart de Vare, Earl Burton, James F. Pitt, Richard Boulger, and Leonard Lieberman.

Thespians

TWO ONE-ACT PLAYS, presented by the Thespian Society of the Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, under the direction of Mrs. William H. Wagner, with stage settings by Alfred Barrett and Mrs. Wagner. At the Massachusetts Avenue Chapel, December 4 and 5.

THE PROGRAM.

"THE WINDOW." Drama in one scene by James Reach.

"C. I. D." Mystery drama in two scenes by M. Zelno.

Re-presenting for the especial benefit of its local supporters the drama entered in the one-act play tournament last October, the Thespian Society last evening offered James Reach's "The Window," followed by M. Zelno's "C. I. D."

Once again the church group gave a creditable production of the Reach psychological drama, relating, in a manner suggestive of Edgar Allen Poe's "The Tell-Tale Heart," the power of suggestion in "forcing" a confession of murder just before an innocent man is about to be electrocuted.

Hugh Ttate again limned the role of the culprit to Isaac Avery's Sergt. Grimes. Emily Tate repeated her part of the keeper of the rooming house whose titular window overlooks the penitentiary's death house.

"C. I. D." could, of course, refer to nothing but the Criminal Investigation Division—popularly known as "Scotland Yard." Arthur Wise appeared as the inspector of the Yard, with Wilfrid Smith and Edythe Aymar as his known and unknown assistants.

James Martin was the wealthy industrialist and club man. Violet Wise and Burleigh Wormington were passersby, and Miss Wise and Marguerite Pope were masked girls.

What transpires in the two scenes of this mystery drama is better left unsaid, that tonight's audience may also experience the same thrill as did the first nighters.

Baltimore to Have Ocean Air Service

Los Angeles, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—Pan American Airways officials tonight announced inauguration of a transcontinental service from Los Angeles to Baltimore, in connection with projected transatlantic air flights expected to start next spring.

It was pointed out American Airways holds the air mail franchise into Baltimore, known as route 23. Transatlantic flights are expected to operate out of Chesapeake Bay, near Baltimore.

Twin-motor Douglas planes, sister ships of the giant "Flying Pullmans," which American Airways is now operating in night service, began operation over the new route.

Single Cottage System Urged At Girl School

Welfare Board Reiterates Second Suggestion on Dormitory.

The District Board of Public Welfare yesterday decided to stand pat on its second recommendation for a single cottage dormitory instead of two small cottages at the National Training School for Girls despite the protest of Senator Copeland (Democrat), of New York, a member of the Senate District Committee.

Frederick W. McReynolds, chairman of the board, called upon Melvin C. Hazen, president of the Board of Commissioners, and informed him of the decision shortly after the publication of Senator Copeland's letter.

Although the board originally favored construction of two 12-room cottages so that inmates at the school might be separated, it reversed its position after the Budget Bureau had insisted that the $100,000 appropriation was recommended with the understanding that a single dormitory would be built.

Senator Copeland was one of Congressional group that demanded rehabilitation of the living quarters at the training school after a personal inspection of the plant last year.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Friday Morning Music Club presents Helen Ware, violinist, and Emily Coville, soprano (Winifred Lakeman and Margaret Tolson, accompanists) in Barker Hall. Program: Concerto in D minor (Bruch), Serenade Triste, Dragonflies, Valse Caprice (Sandor Zsolt), For Peace, Lullaby, Canary and Wildbird (Helen Ware), Etude No. 13 (Paganini-Spalding), La Gitana (Kreisler), Spanish Dance (De Falla-Kreisler), Zapateado (Sarasate), Romance (Glazunov), to the Children (Rakhmaninov), Wanderers Nachtlied, Die Post (Shubert).

That fate which moves concert artists about on the chess-board of engagements is largely responsible for the fact that Helen Ware is heard less often by her townspeople than by music lovers of other communities. Her appearance yesterday before the Friday Morning Music Club was therefore the more welcome because of its rarity. Not only was she in the mood for playing, but her tone and her technical facility were at the top of their form.

There was no small charm in her reading of Max Bruch's D minor concerto, which may not be as overtly beautiful as the G minor, but nevertheless combines loveliness of thematic material with grace of structure. Bruch's lyricism springs from the instinct of the improvisatore and has a free and weightless flight, while his inbred romanticism is evident in his wealth of poetic imagery.

The three novelties by the contemporary Czech composer, Sandor Zsolt, proved to be pieces delightful for the ear, but difficult for the fingers and the bow. Abounding in the conceits of fantasy, they are melodically attractive and piquant in harmony. The wistful serenade is rather in the style of Szymanovski, though not to the point of imitation. "Dragonflies" is imaginative and atmospheric, and the "Valse Caprice" a brilliant tour de force.

Miss Ware's three compositions are revelatory of some of her own traits. Love of beauty and serenity motivates the calm melody and the untroubled movement of "For Peace;" tenderness and sympathy sing in the delicate "Lullaby;" and a prankish humor sparkles in the programmatic "Canary and Wildbird," which calls for expertness in technique.

Emily Coville, in her group of songs, gave effective projection to their disparate emotional content. The most secure in interpretation was Rakhmaninov's "To the Children," which she imbued with compassion.

Gertrude Clarke Whittall Foundation in the Library of Congress presents the Stradivarius Quartet and Beryl Rubinstein, pianist, Friday afternoon in the chamber music auditorium. Program: Quartet in B flat, Op. 64, No. 3 (Haydn), Suite for viola and piano (Bloch), Quartet in A minor, Op. 51, No. 2 (Brahms).

At their second appearance in the current series of chamber music programs, Wolfe Wolfinsohn, Alfred Pochon, Marcel Dick and Ivan d'Archambeau were spirited and adroit performers of Haydn and Brahms. The B flat quarte from Haydn's Opus 64 is one of the comparatively unfamiliar foursomes from the pen of the composer who, if he did not actually invent the form, molded it so sedulously and skilfully that musical historians accord him the status of its parent.

It matters not which of Haydn's 77 quartets one is hearing, for one is always struck by the inexhaustible vitality, the unflagging genuinity, and the utter limpidity of the music. On the basis of the free flow of the writing, one would think that composition was never a labor for Haydn, but an expression as natural as conversation.

The A minor quartet of Brahms is also conversation, but of quite a different kind. It is a dramatic monologue, urgent with emotions, passionately phrased, yet consciously wrought with the poet's sense of accent and color. The music is packed with thought, condensed in expression, and direct in impact.

Ernest Bloch's splendid suite for viola and piano was admirably played by Marcel Dick and Beryl Rubinstein. A work of which Americans may be proud, for it was written in New York 17 years ago while the composer was struggling for a foothold in the country of which he later became a citizen, it is a sincere and poignant document. The firm solidity of the music, the inevitability of its structure, the virility of emotion, and the power of imagination are extraordinary.

This is not pleasant music, nor was it meant to be. It was written out of suffering, out of the pain of disappointment, out of spiritual stress. It is music that questions, that demands, that cries its indignation. It is charged now with poignancy, now with defiance; it is in turn animated by a humor savage in its bitterness and by a hope transcendent in its reaching.

Mrs. Ely Culbertson on Contract

Discouraging a Holdup.

One of the most important plays to the declarer at a notrump contract is the holdup. The technique of this play is simply to defer winning a trick in a suit until one opponent has played his last card in that suit. If that opponent subsequently gets the lead he may have no way of enabling his partner to run the suit.

Naturally, there are standard defenses against the play. The best is that employed by East in the hand below.

South, dealer.
East-West vulnerable.

	♠ 7 4 ♡ K 8 2 ◇ Q J 9 6 2 ♣ Q 6 3
♠ J 9 8 6 5 ♡ Q 9 6 5 ◇ 7 5 3 ♣ 8	North West East South	♠ A Q 3 ♡ 10 7 4 3 ◇ 8 4 ♣ A 10 9 5
	♠ K 10 2 ♡ A J ◇ A K 10 ♣ K J 7 4 2

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
2 N T	Pass	3 N T	Pass
Pass	Pass

West opened the six of spades and East played the Queen! South dared not refuse to win the trick; for if the lead had been from a spade suit headed by the Ace-Jack, he would never make his King unless he took it then. South ran his five diamonds hoping the opponents would discard spades. But East and West refused to oblige, and on the first club lead East won with the Ace and led the Ace and a small spade.

The key to declarer's defeat was East's play of the Queen of spades at the first trick. Had he done what so many other players would have, declarer would have made his contract with ease. Thus had East taken the first trick with the Ace of spades and continued the suit, South would have refused to win until the third round. Then when East finally should get the lead with the Ace of clubs, he would have no way of letting West run the rest of the spade suit. Instead of being set one trick, declarer would have made an overtrick.

Canadian Woman M.P. Defends King's Romance

Toledo, Dec. 4 (A.P.).—The romance of King Edward VIII and Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson should not be shattered, nor should the youthful ruler of the British Empire lose his throne, said Miss Agness MacPhail, first woman member of the Canadian Parliament, here today.

"Naturally, I regret the difficulties which have arisen because of the Simpson affair and I believe Mrs. Simpson is the person most responsible for the crisis," Miss MacPhail said.

Dodgers Make Swaps With Cubs and Pirates

Frey Goes to Chicago for Henshaw, English; Brandt Traded.

By Paul Mickelson.
Associated Press Sports Writer

Montreal, Dec. 4.—Gruff, tough Burleigh Grimes, who did less talking than any manager lolling around the baseball bazaar this week, did some rapid-fire pitching for Brooklyn today by getting four players for the price of two from the Chicago Cubs and Pittsburgh Pirates.

Making his first venture in the market as a big league trader, the new Brooklyn manager swapped Shortstop Linus Frey to the Cubs for Infielder Elwood (Woody) English and Roy Henshaw, diminutive southpaw pitcher.

A few minutes later, old Burleigh closed a deal whereby he traded Southpaw Pitcher Ed Brandt to the Pirates for Second Baseman Harry (Cookie) Lavagetto and Ralph Birkofer, young southpaw.

Grimes' little trading spree saved the day's market from becoming one of the deadest in many years. Except for Burleigh's activities, the only piece of news to come from the meeting was a left-handed slap at Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis by the minors. They reversed their decision yesterday on his proposed rider on the Baltimore amendment and rejected it by unanimous vote.

First Landis Reversal.

At yesterday's meeting, the minors adopted the Baltimore amendment, permitting scouts and representatives of all ball clubs to recommend players to teams of lower classification without being denied the right later on to buy for themselves the player recommended.

When the commissioner heard of the proposed amendment, he submitted his rider, which would require all recommendations to be filed in his office as well as those of the president of the league involved and the head of the minor league association. The minors voted for the rider, 7 to 4.

Today, however, President Dal Hill, of the Piedmont League, resurrected the rider and led a movement which resulted in its unanimous defeat.

It was Commissioner Landis' first defeat on any proposal. Although the Baltimore amendment has no direct bearing on the case of Bob Feller, Cleveland pitching sensation, it lifted Cleveland's hopes that the commissioner would see the sentiment on more liberality in minor-major league contract affairs and award the schoolboy pitcher to

Chisox May Trade Whitehead to Tribe

Montreal, Dec. 4 (AP).—Manager Jimmy Dykes of Chicago White Sox said today he would trade Pitcher Johnny Whitehead to Cleveland Indians if a deal could be arranged whereby the White Sox got Thornton Lee, veteran southpaw, and Catcher Joe Becker in return for the big righthander.

As all Indians representatives at the minor league convention had left the city, no Cleveland reaction to the proposed deal could be obtained.

Whitehead, who won 13 games and lost 8 last season, came to the Sox from Dallas in 1935.

Lee is 30 years old and has pitched about .500 ball in his four years with Cleveland. Becker is rated as a promising young catcher.

L. S. U. to Play Santa Clara in Sugar Bowl

By the Associated Press.

Baton Rouge, La., Dec. 4.—Louisiana State and Santa Clara were named today for the New Orleans Sugar Bowl football game New Year's Day.

The selection was announced by the New Orleans Midwinter Sports Association which sponsors the grid event.

Louisiana State, Southeastern Conference champion, goes into the Sugar Bowl undefeated this season, but tied in an early season game by Texas.

Santa Clara is undefeated and untied, but has a final game to play Saturday against Texas Christian University.

Selection of the two powerhouse elevens met with instant approval in Southern sports circles. The choice of Pittsburgh to meet Washington in the Rose Bowl left L. S. U. open for the New Orleans game.

Both Washington and Pittsburgh have been beaten and tied. Sugar Bowl sponsors lost no time in declaring the winner of the New Orleans game "would be recognized throughout the football world as the national champion."

Smith Leads Miami Golf With 68

Forrester and Espinosa Shoot Aces in First Day of Tourney.

By the Associated Press.

Coral Gables, Fla., Dec. 4.—Horton Smith, ambling golfer from the Ozarks, made it tough today on 200 colleagues trying to take his Miami-Biltmore Open title and the $2,500 that goes with it.

Although they shot two holes in one at him, the blonde defending champion, putting like a wizard, put together a 31 and 37 for a 68, three under par, in the first 18 holes of the 72-hole route that leads to $10,000 in prizes.

The holes in one were dropped by Jack Forrester, of Oradell, N. J., and young Abe Espinosa, of Shreveport, La., but both of them wound up down in the ruck.

Forrester sank a No. 6 iron shot off the 165-yard second tee, but his outward bound was two over par and he finished five above with 76.

Espinosa Gets One.

Espinosa, also swinging a No. 6 iron, lofted his in on the 145-yard fourteenth. He shot 38 coming back. He had a 75 for the full layout.

Tournament officials could recollect no other aces in this annual event, inaugurated in 1931.

Al Houghton, Bannockburn professional, carded the best score of any of a trio from the Washington, D. C. area. Houghton's 36-37-73, placed him just five strokes behind the front-running Smith. Roland

East Wins 4 All-American Berths; Kelley and Frank, of Yale, Named

By Alan Gould.
By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 4.—Picking this year's all-America football eleven, with a supporting cast sufficient to equip the mythical team with material three deep in each position, proved scarcely less nerve-racking than trying to fix the relative merits of leading collegiate units.

The East, with more teams in the top flight than it has had in a dozen years, produced the country's bumper crop of all-stars. Four members of the Associated Press first eleven and one-third of the all-America squad of 33 players were selected from the region this year, in celebrating from 50 to 60 years of pigskin rivalry.

The Midwest contributed three to the first team and nine to the squad as a whole. Two from the South, one each from the Far West and Southwest completed the big eleven.

East Best Since 1927.

Not since 1927 has the East enjoyed a plurality in the race for national all-star honors. Yale's two key men, Capt. Lawrence Morgan Kelley and Clinton Edward Frank, combined to gather as much American distinction as Old Elf has collected in 11 previous seasons.

Kelley, a leader with rare gifts as a pass catcher, tackler and opportunist as well as the year's most colorful performer, shares the end assignments with Louisiana State's Gaynell Tinsley. The 195-pound Southern star, only repeater on the All-America list, likewise soared to spectacular heights. Their nearest rivals were Andy Bershak, of North Carolina; Capt. Merle Wendt, of Ohio State; Matt Patanelli, of Michigan, and Bill Daddio, the great Pitt sophomore.

Frank, making the grade in his junior year, combined rugged ball-carrying with duties as signal-caller, blocker, passer and backer-upper. He was the hardest runner in the East to check. The All-America backfield has everything to be desired with Ray (Buzz) Buivid, of Marquette, a passing specialist as well as a running and blocking star; Duke's Ace Parker, multiple threat, with special facility for kicking, pass-receiving and broken-field running, and Nebraska's Sam Francis, a heavy-duty worker, able to stand the gaff against such a powerhouse as Pittsburgh, for example, and turn in a grand job of blocking, tackling, kicking, passing and line-smashing.

Arguments raged on the West Coast concerning relative merits of a flock of fine backfield carriers, blockers, kickers and passers.

Hoyas Recover Fumble Behind Goal to Score

Torrance Ring Debut Awaits Bigger Gloves

New Orleans, Dec. 4 (AP).—"Baby Jack" Torrance, huge Olympic shotputter, will make his ring debut here Monday if promoters can find a pair of boxing gloves large enough to fit him.

The Baton Rouge policeman has trained down from 320 to a mere 260 pounds, but the excessive weight came off his waistline and not his hands.

Abe Katz, who is handling the match against Owen Flynn, a 220-pounder, scoured Louisiana sporting goods concerns without success.

Desperate, he wired a New York firm ordering special gloves by plane.

Quick Kick Is Factor in Victory; Only 5,000 Watch Battle.

By Lewis F. Atchison.
A Staff Correspondent.

Miami, Fla., Dec. 4.—The jinx that has stood between Georgetown and victory in the Hoyas' final game of every season since 1926, reared its leering head again tonight, rubbed out a 6-to-3 lead they held for a brief time and sent them reeling into a 10-to-6 defeat before a slim throng of 5,000 fans.

Twelve hundred miles from home, engaged in a game which meant nothing if won and a decided loss of prestige if lost, the Hilltoppers saw Miami's smart and well-drilled eleven kick a field goal in the second period and score a touchdown in the third to clinch the decision.

Georgetown couldn't match the speed, precision and determination of its host, and although it made a couple of threatening gestures, finished a poor second. Their scoring punch was a negative weapon, and their touchdown the result of a Miami fumble recovered behind the Hurricanes' goal line by Joe Williams. Bill Valliquette missed the extra point.

It may have been the heat that beat 'em, but it was the heat of Miami's attack, and the blistering fury of its defense—not the weather.

The Hurricanes lived up to their name tonight and produced four men, one who recently won All-Southern recognition, Bob Masterson, who could play on any man's team. The others were Eddie Dunn, quarterback; Andy Csaky and Tony Vaccarelli, halfbacks.

It was a quick kick by Dunn not a punt but a deceptive placement from a position unbelivably close to the line that caught Georgetown napping near the end of the second period and paved the way for Miami's field goal.

The ensuing exchange of kicks gave the Hurricane possession of the ball on Georgetown's 31. An offside penalty cost Georgetown 5 yards, and a flat pass from Dunn to Csaky gave Miami first down on the 14 where the Hoyas gave their first hint of resistance. Three line plays failed before Dicker, a guard, dropped back and booted a beauty through the uprights.

The same fellow tried another not long after when Miami took the

Terrors Rated Favorite Over Maryland

Better Reserves for Battle at Baltimore Today Gives Them Edge.

Maryland will go into its football game with Western Maryland in the Baltimore Stadium today at 2 o'clock the underdog despite its 22-to-7 victory last year on the same gridiron.

The Terrors have no Bill Guckeyson, but other than the great Maryland back, the Western Maryland squad embraces considerably more assets all down the line than the Terrapins. The Terrors are two deep every place. The Terps have only four men they have used to any extent outside the starting line-up.

A sample of Western Maryland's strength is illustrated by the tackle situation at Westminster. The Terrors have two fine letter men in Harry Balish and Puffey Forthman, the latter weighing 235 pounds, but likely will start Paul Horner and Steve Radatovich, two sophs, who have shown to marked advantage, and still have three more good men for the position in Joe O'Leair, John Green and Bob Dickson. Only one of the seven weighs under 190.

Maryland Short Handed.

Another sample of Western Maryland's power is illustrated in the center job where Jack Lytton has stepped to the front to take the starting assignment away Ed Peters who has played there in eight big games. Both are sophs and get the call over Clarence Slaysman, a junior.

So unless Maryland can keep its "iron men" on the field constantly in the combat today, its chances of winning are far from bright. It is only the ability of Guckeyson and a couple other fleet Maryland backs that keeps the Terrors from being overwhelming favorites.

Maryland figures Western Maryland will be just about the most powerful team it has met this season, not even excluding North Carolina which beat the Terps, 14 to 0.

Hall Defeats Bozeman In Cue Tourney, 50-49

Chicago, Dec. 4 (AP).—Allen Hall, of Chicago, won his second game of the world's three-cushion billiards tournament today, defeating Jay Bozeman, of Detroit, 50 to 49 in 54 innings. The game was one of the most closely contested of the meet.

In an earlier match Kinrey Matsuyama, Tokyo, Japan, registered his fourth victory in the tournament, defeating Earl Lookabaugh, Chicago, 50 to 40, in 44 innings. The Japanese star ran six. Lookabaugh had a high run of five.

Pitt Choice Slight on Southern Football, Say Dixie Sports Editors; Coast Writers Irked

Los Angeles, Dec. 4 (AP).—Sports commentators of two Los Angeles newspapers voiced sharp criticism today of Washington's selection of Pittsburgh as its Rose Bowl opponent.

Sid Ziff, sports editor of the Evening Herald and Express, wrote:

"The Washington moguls who arranged this 'splendid' treat and tossed it nonchalantly into the laps of southern California grid fans had nothing to say about why they ignored Dixie.

"They asked the press to get behind the thing, put the shoulder to the wheel as usual, but they never tried to contact the press or public of southern California for its Rose Bowl preference.

"And so, my sympathies to Washington. I repeat, my sympathies.

"Because the setup now is just blah!

"Washington can have the game, we don't want it."

Maxwell Stiles, writing in the Los Angeles Examiner, said:

"And so we'll have to put up with Pittsburgh again in the Rose Bowl! And when we could have had Louisiana State or Alabama. * * *

"Of all the teams that ever played

Coaches Surprised At Pittsburgh Choice

Los Angeles, Dec. 4 (AP).—Two football coaches, Frank Thomas, of Alabama, and Bernie Bierman, of Minnesota, today expressed "surprise" at the selection of Pittsburgh to play in the Rose Bowl game in Pasadena against Washington.

"I am surprised at the choice," said Coach Thomas. "Alabama didn't expect to be picked, but I believe Louisiana State had a right to expect the nomination.

"I saw Louisiana State conquer Tulane and if Pittsburgh is any better than Louisiana State it would have to be a world beater."

Coach Bierman's comment was brief: "I was surprised. I thought Alabama or some Southern team would get the bid."

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Dec. 4.—Southern sports editors called the selection of Pittsburgh today for Washington's opponent in the Rose Bowl a "slight" on Southern football, setting the stage for a national championship game in the Sugar Bowl at New Orleans.

"For reasons that probably will never be explained," said Bill Keefe, sports editor of the New Orleans Times-Picayune, "the Rose Bowl left open to the Sugar Bowl the top choice of available teams for New Year's Day. * * *

"The Sugar Bowl now has the Nation's outstanding team—Louisiana State. And, with Santa Clara as the opponent, the Sugar Bowl will have the better game.

"From here on out, the Sugar Bowl is going to be a nightmare to those Californians. Their day is done as the big New Year's sports attraction."

In announcing Louisiana State and Santa Clara as Sugar Bowl foes, Joseph M. Cousins, president of the New Orleans Midwinter Sports Association's bowl committee, said the winner "would be

Irish Favored Over Trojans

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Dec. 4.—Southern California fans made merry at their annual home-coming celebration tonight before sending the Trojans into what looks like a football slaughter tomorrow against Notre Dame.

Coach Elmer Layden led his Irishmen into town tonight and hurried to the banquet as honor guest.

Trojan backers clung to a slim hope that Southern California might dim Notre Dame's late season brilliance.

The intersectional series, starting in 1926, has produced three clashes decided by one point. The count stands at six victories for the Irish and four for Coach Howard Jones' Trojans. The Irish won the last two, 14 to 0 here in 1934 and 20 to 13 last year at South Bend.

Among coaches here for the game and banquet are two former Notre Dame stars, Frank Thomas of Alabama and Jimmy Phelan of the Washington Huskies, and Bernie Bierman of Minnesota. Francis Schmidt of Ohio State and Bob Zuppke of Illinois.

All-America luminaries present included Jim Thorpe, of the Carlisle Indians; Eddie Kaw, of Cornell, and Nick Lukats, of Notre Dame.

Aroused Always Ahead in Charles Town Race

Luculent Pays $15, Biggest Of the Day

Justa Play, SumacWorth $22.60 in Double on Muddy Track.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, Race Track, Dec. 4.—Running over a track that looked like a mixture for a chocolate cake before it is put in the oven, Mrs. B. F. Christmas' Aroused led all the way to register his second victory of the meeting. The race, the Calhoun Purse, drew a field of six and Buck Langhorne took down second money ahead of Rough Party.

Freddy Faust, a Washington boy, escaped a mud bath on the winner. He was forced to shake up his mount going to the first turn but once in front he was not seriously challenged. Buck Langhorne and Rough Party both had their trouble at the first turn. The former made up a world of ground along the backstretch and appeared to be a serious menace as the field entered the stretch but he hung in the final stages and Aroused was going easily at the finish.

The largest week-day crowd of the meeting, some 4,000, witnessed the program. The weather was ideal overhead. Aroused paid an $8.40 mutuel.

Those who combined Justa Play and Sumac in the daily double collected a $22.60 mutuel.

Take Off, a son of Theo Cook, one-time half-mile king took the first race in the role of a $5.40 favorite, leading from flag fall to finish over the 4½-furlong course. W. Snyder gave the winner a hustling ride. Injustice was second and Chatteress third. Spear was well played, but had some trouble after the break.

The second straight favorite accounted for the purse in the second race when Justa Play stayed to collect a nose decision from Tell It. Third money went to Twidgets. Justa Play, Vaccillate and Tell It ran as a team to the turn. Vacillate dropped out of it, but the other pair battled it out right down to the wire. L. Machado did the riding on the winner, which paid a $5.20 mutuel.

Sumac, owned by A. Booker, trained by J. Booker, and ridden by R. Booker, won the third race at a $9.60 mutuel. The Supremus filly finally stepped out of the maiden class with a four-length victory over Nella Canter, with Cautious Bo third.

Luculent Pays $15.40.

Berry Patch outclassed her field in the fourth race, contested over the 7-furlong course. The daughter of Brown Bud showed a liking for the mud and after disposing of Black Chief, went on to win well in hand. Black Chief lasted to be second, with Magic Gift third. The winner, ridden by Al Tryon, paid a $14 mutuel.

Mrs. G. H. Pearce's Minna, with Jockey Faust aboard, took down the sixth race at a $9.40 mutuel, defeating Chatterdoo, the favorite.

The final brought a purse to Luculent, with Jockey Johnny Shanks in the saddle, to pay a $15.40 mutuel.

District Gets National Marathon; A. A. U. Parley Opens Quietly

Presidential Struggle Is Predicted

Records Group Passes on High-Jump, Hurdle, Pole-Vault Marks.

By the Associated Press.

Houston, Tex., Dec. 4.—Despite indications of a last ditch fight for the presidency between two New York lawyers, Jeremiah T. Mahoney and Maj. Patrick J. Walsh, the forty-eighth annual convention of the Amateur Athletic Union opened today with factional forces concentrating on a harmonious adjustment of differences, which at one time threatened to rip the organization apart.

A conference late today between the retiring president and Olympic chieftain, Avery Brundage, of Chicago, and Mahoney paved the way for consolidated action on everything except the rivalry for office.

Reports that the spirit of compromise would prevail, in spite of the strong personal animosities involved, were spiked by Brundage's statement he would maintain his support of Walsh for the presidency.

Mahoney countered with the remark "I will run" and his campaign leaders claimed, with apparent foundation, that he would be swept into office for the coming year by a decisive majority.

District Gets Marathon.

Meantime the delegates, numbering 168 and registered from all parts of the country, paved the way for award of all major 1937 championship competitions and moved to save the metric system of measurement from being discarded entirely by the United States in track athletics.

The 1937 wrestling championship was awarded to Baltimore of the South Atlantic Association; the national marathon to Washington, D. C., and the senior cross-country to the Jersey Association.

Boston, which hasn't staged the event in three years, was voted the national boxing championship tournament in preference to St. Louis.

Marquette University of Milwaukee, with a $6,000 check to back up its bid, was awarded next year's national outdoor track and field championship meet, probably in July.

Denver won approval for its bid for the National Men's Basketball Tournament, for the third straight year.

The track and field committee, with Maj. Walsh in the chair, sprang a surprise by coming out in favor of retaining the metric system, at least for the national indoor and outdoor championship meets. The resolution will be debated on the convention floor.

The committee put its stamp of approval on the following marks already given world record approval by the International A. A. F. at Berlin last summer: High jump, 6 feet 9¾ inches, by Cornelius Johnson and David Albritton; 14.1 seconds, for both the 110-meter and 120-yard high hurdles, by Forest G. Towns; Pole vault, 14 feet 6½ inches, by George Baroff; and 2-mile run, 8 minutes 58.3 seconds, by Donald R. Lash.

The following American indoor track and field marks were approved tonight by the A. A. U. records committee:

60 yards (dirt track), 6.1 seconds, by Sam Stoller, Michigan, equaling record of Jesse Owens; 440 yards (dirt track), 48.9 seconds, by Ray Ellinwood, Chicago; 600 meters, 1:21, by Eddie O'Brien, Syracuse; 1,500 meters, 3:49.9, by Gene Venzke, Pennsylvania; 1,000-meter relay, 2:00, by New York University (Bernstein, Striplin, Eisenberg and Krosney); 70-yard high hurdles (dirt track), 8.6 seconds, by Dan Caldemeyer, Indiana, and Robert Osgood, Michigan; 35-pound weight throw, 58 feet 4¼ inches, by Henry Dreyer, New York A. C.; high jump, 6 feet 6¼ inches, by Cornelius Johnson, Los Angeles, and Ed Burke, Marquette; standing high jump, 5 feet 6 inches, by Harold M. Osborn, Philadelphia.

Dodgers Trade With Cubs, Pirates

Cleveland, instead of ruling him a free agent on the charge of violating the sandlot rule.

Brooklyn's deals, definitely one to give the daffiness boys of Flatbush new faces and greater defensive strength, solved one of Chicago's keenest problems—what to do with English.

The 29-year-old Cub was rated one of the prize infielders in baseball over a period from 1929 and 1932, but mystery surrounded him from then on as he was used largely for utility duty. The Cubs said English wasn't in the "dog house," but the fact remained he was used less and less. In 1935, he appeared in only 34 games, last season he was in and out of 64. English was with the Cubs ten seasons and was a field captain.

Henshaw, who won six and lost five last season, is 25.

Brandt Was a Prize.

Henshaw's greatest triumphs were turned in against the Pirates. He beat them almost every time he stepped onto the mound. In 1935 he trimmed the Pirates seven times in eight starts.

Frey, 24 years old, broke into big time with Brooklyn in 1933, hitting .319 in 34 games. His batting fell off to .284 in 1934, to .262 in 1935 and to .279 last season. Manager Grimm said he would give Frey every chance to win the third base berth from Stanley Hack next season.

Brandt, long regarded as a pitching prize in the National League, went to Brooklyn last season after pitching eight seasons for the Boston Nationals for whom he won 94 and lost 119. Last season Brandt won 11 and lost 13 for Brooklyn.

Lavagetto came to the Pirates from Oakland and showed promise, but Bill Brubaker and Floyd Young beat him out of the third and second base jobs and he never got back regularly.

Al Houghton Is Among Leaders With 73 in $10,000 Play.

MacKenzie, of the Congressional Country Club, carded a 37-38-75 and Leo Walper, Bethesda, Md., driving range professional fell far behind the leaders with a 42-39-81.

Smith, registered from the Oak Park Club in Chicago, took only nine putts on the first nine holes, sinking his approaching chip on the seventh.

Toward the end of the second nine, his putter failed him.

"I should have had an easy 66," he commented dejectedly, shaking his head.

Only 8 Better Par.

The unwieldly field, which will be trimmed drastically after tomorrow's 18 holes, could not complete the first round before dark. Among those unable to finish were Denny Shute, P. G. A. champion, Bill Mehlhorn, Vic Ghezzi, Paul Runyan and Frank Walsh.

Smith, Shute and Ralph Guldahl, winner of the Augusta Open last week, were favorites. Guldahl, was bracketed at 70 with Fay Coleman, Dick Metz and Harold "Jug" McSpaden.

Ahead of them with 69's were Gene Sarazen, Bob Stupple and Billy Burke. Only eight players bettered par 71.

Gudahl suffered a penalty on the short fourteenth when his tee shot landed just off the green and he pulled two clubs from his bag to decide which to use for the chip. As he dropped the club he wanted to discard, it hit the ball. Guldahl just sank his approach shot and got his par three anyway.

Carl Dann, jr., of Orlando, Fla., did not defend his amateur title.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

How sweet it is, as they say in our set, for the Sugar Bowl game in New Orleans now that the Rose Bowl people have so grandly muffed the chance to make the Pasadena affair an honest test of East-West football supremacy.

POVICH.

When the Pacific Coast folks, in their screwy judgment and pitiful astigmatism overlooked both Louisiana State and the University of Alabama and extended the Rose Bowl invitation to Pitt, New Orleans' Sugar Bowl game was "made."

The New Orleans affair, inaugurated a half dozen years ago, had always been hopelessly overshadowed by the Pasadena Tournament of Roses game, but come New Year's Day the national championship will come closer to being decided at New Orleans than it will at Pasadena.

It didn't require the New Orleans people long to capitalize on the Rose Bowl's obvious muff. When they were able to match Louisiana State and Santa Clara for the Sugar Bowl game they came up with a contest that is far more significant than the Pitt-University of Washington clash as far as national title prestige is concerned.

In contrast to the Rose Bowl battle, which brings together a pair of teams each of which has once been beaten and once tied, the Sugar Bowl game will align against each other a major team that is untied and unbeaten, and the undisputed champion of the South, tied once but still undefeated.

Santa Clara will go to the Sugar Bowl with a legitimate claim to being the Pacific Coast's best team, Washington notwithstanding. Only a narrow tradition, limiting the West's Rose Bowl representatives to Coast Conference teams kept Santa Clara, the Nation's only major unbeaten, untied team, out of the Pasadena game.

And in the Louisiana State team, the Sugar Bowl officials have also scored. There is none to challenge L. S. U.'s position on the Eastern team with the proudest record. Santa Clara and L. S. U. are truly representative of the best in East-West football and though the roses and the glamour may belong to the Coast on New Year's Day, students of the game will be watching the procedure at New Orleans for a true line on the final national ratings of the teams.

Thus the Rose Bowl game has lost caste.

The University of Washington may have chosen no soft touch when it issued the invitation to Pittsburgh instead of to Louisiana State or Alabama, but fans will hardly wait breathlessly on the result of the game. The only thing it will decide is the championship of the U. of Washington and Pittsburgh.

The Pittsburgh team, I'm thinking, is a lucky outfit to be invited back to the Rose Bowl after three losing efforts out there, including two miserable performances in which they upheld the prestige of the East by taking a 47-to-14 beating in 1930 and showing a bit of improvement three years later when they held the Coast representative to a 35-0 score.

After those two games the Coast was confident it wanted no more of Pitt, but here they are again back in the Rose Bowl.

At that, the Panthers appear, as I was saying, no soft touch despite their unhappy record in Rose Bowl games. The Huskies may not have picked the team with the best record when they picked Pitt, but they chose a team that owns victories over Notre Dame, Ohio State and Nebraska. That 26-0 beating they handed the Irish is cause for pause.

But that defeat by little Duquesne and the scoreless tie with Fordham removed Pitt very emphatically from any championship consideration. The Rose Bowl people played directly into the hands of the Sugar Bowl folks. Pasadena may spray the stadium with roses and stage a grand spectacle on New Year's Day, but it will be at New Orleans that the football game of the day will be played.

Gormley, Terp Gridder, to Get Football Blocking Trophy

By the Associated Press.

Clinton, S. C., Dec. 4.—John J. Gormley, of the University of Maryland; William May, of Louisiana State University, and A. A. Sabados, of The Citadel, will receive the Jacobs football blocking trophies for 1936.

William P. Jacobs, president of Presbyterian College, who donates the trophies each year to the best blockers in the State, Southern Conference and Southeastern Conference fields, announced the awards to Gormley and May today. The selection of Sabados was announced yesterday.

Jacobs said the votes gathered by conference officials gave J. W. Acree, of the University of Virginia, second place in the Southern Conference, and Arthur White, Alabama, in the Southeastern.

The trophies will be presented at a banquet here the evening of December 8, with Forrest Fletcher, of Washington and Lee University, president of the Southern Conference, as guest speaker.

Miami Downs Georgetown By 10 to 6

Field Goal and Pass Attack Beats Hoyas Who Score on a Fumble.

ball on Georgetown's 23, where Moulin fumbled when hit hard by Masterson as he took Wolcuff's punt. Again Georgetown's line held and again Dicker place-kicked, but this one was about 2 feet off its course.

Almost at the mental boiling point by this turn of events, the Hoyas came back strong as the second half got under way and drove Miami back to its own 18 on the first exchange of punts, Hardy downing the ball.

Miami elected to run the ball, but gained nothing on two plays before Masterson tried an around-end run. He fumbled and a slew of Georgetown linemen were after the ball like hawks. Two of them fought over it, Vaccaro and Hardy, and it slipped away from them, rolling over into the end zone. Joe Williams dropped on it for the touchdown and his team's only score, for Valliquette's placement was wide.

Miami went into the air for its winning points, marching 65 yards to pay dirt after getting the ball on a punt. Vaccarelli and Dunn hit the line for a first down at midfield and Bolash took a basketball pass directly over the middle of the line and the astonished Georgetown's secondary's collective heads for another first down on the 34. Then Dunn shot a flat 15-yard pass to Masterson, who went another 15 for the touchdown. Bob Nolan hit him and almost knocked him out of bounds on the 4-yard line, but Masterson managed to keep his feet until he went sprawling over the goal line.

Then followed Georgetown's best drive of the evening, a 70-yard march that carried the Hoyas from their own 20 to Miami's 10, where their passing and running game cracked wide open. Tony Barabas and Elmer Moulin were the spearheads of this march, Moulin interspersing line bucks with passas to Barabas.

Oddly enough, Barabas was withdrawn in favor of Noland after taking his second pass for the second first down on Miami's 31. It looked like a good piece of strategy as Nolan bore through the middle for 8 yards, followed by Moulin who went through the same hole for another first down on the 17-yard mark. Moulin fought his way to the 12-yard line where Miami braced and held for three downs. On the fourth, he whipped a short pass to Duff who bumped into a swarm of Miami men and was thrown a few scant inches short of another first down.

Joe Tinker Rallies In Fight for Life

Orlando, Fla., Dec. 4 (AP).—Joe Tinker rallied slightly tonight, but physicians held little hope for the recovery of the famed old-time baseball player laid low by a stroke of paralysis.

He was "resting fairly comfortably," but his condition was critical. He became seriously ill several days ago.

The spark-plug of the immortal "Tinker to Evers to Chance" double play combination now is 56 years old.

The stroke was brought on by diabetes and Bright's disease.

Tinker came to Orlando in 1920, after his playing days were over, and helped organize a club in the old Florida State League.

When the Florida boom was getting started, he entered the real estate field.

He and his wife have four children and several grandchildren.

Grid Banquets Given Central, Western

15 Are Awarded Letters at Central Fete; 22 on Red Squad Honored.

A vigorous request for assistants to the high school football coaches was voiced at the Central High grid banquet last night by Sylvan King, prominent "C" Club alumnus and former Central and Princeton star. Among the banqueters were 82 Central gridmen, 15 of whom were awarded their letter "C's" by Coach Hardy Pearce.

King told the gathering at Collier's Inn that it was "too much to expect one coach to take care of three big squads." Instead of recruiting alumni to help, he said, the coaches should be given assistants.

He also said the high schools should have some connection with the national rules committee. College men make the rules, he pointed out, although football is not essentially just a college game.

Toastmaster was Principal Lawrence E. Hoover, who congratulated both the coach and players on a fine year. Other speakers were Birch E. Bayh, supervisor of physical education and sports of the school system; Dr. I. J. Silverman, team physician; J. F. Bougher, of the Central faculty; Phil Fox, coach of the junior varsity, and the following too eager sports writers: Garrett Waters, of the Times; David Apter, of the News; Burt Hawkins, of the Star; Al Costello, of the Herald, and John R. Vosburgh, of The Post.

The following players were awarded letters:

Capt. Bill Wootton, John Chamberlain, John Swank, Bill Noonan, Louis Chacof, Bill Vermillion, Bernie Askins, William Ickes, Sam Fox, Hush Cramer, Charlie Jones, Frank Hodge, Joe Feuz, Bill Mandis, John Pistolas and Manager Nick Malus.

22 Western Gridders Awarded Letters

Twenty-two Western High football players were awarded their letter "W's" last night at the school's annual grid banquet at Sholl's Connecticut avenue cafe. Coach A. J. Bergman, of Catholic University, was the guest speaker.

Principal Elmer F. Newton filled the toastmaster role. Other speakers were Bryan Morse, former coach, official and newspaperman; Frank (Buck) O'Neil, sports writer; Arch McDonald, radio sports commentator, and Coach Dan Ahearn.

Among the 75 diners were members of the school's "W" Club and the Lightweight Club coached by Cliff Moore. The following players received letters: James Farquharson, Phil Crabbe, Campbell Oliphant and Leonard Weinstein, of The Post's all-high team; John McCracken, Manuel Iglesias, Sam Stonestreet, Charlie Emmerick, Frank Donahue Charles Ritt, Charles Krause, Tommy Ward, Mason Morse, Robert Nye, Blackie Brewer, Morris Snead, Don and Hugh Niklason, George Smith, Emory Prince, Dickie Lynham and Manager Gene Cleary.

Tars List 2 New Foes on 1937 Grid Card

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 4.—The Navy football schedule for 1937, consisting of nine games, was announced today at the Naval Academy by Lieut. Comdr. Andrew C. McFall, graduate manager of athletics.

With two exceptions, the opponents of the Navy team are the same as those they met during the past season. Columbia, which will play at Annapolis on November 6, takes the place of Yale, while the Citadel, of Charleston, S. C., taking the place of Davidson, will meet the Navy, also at Annapolis on December 2. It is the only team on the schedule which has not met the Midshipmen before.

Notre Dame will pick a point in the West for its game with the Navy on October 23.

The schedule:

September 25, William and Mary at Annapolis.
October 2, Citadel at Annapolis; 9, University of Virginia at Annapolis; 16, Harvard at Baltimore; 23, Notre Dame at Western point to be selected by Notre Dame; 30, University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia.
November 6, Columbia at Annapolis; 20, Princeton at Princeton; 27, Army at Philadelphia.

Wilson Teachers Play Frostburg Five Tonight

Facing an ambitious schedule which includes a game with Duquesne University here, February 18, Wilson Teachers College opens its basketball season tonight at Wilson, with Frostburg Teachers College as the opposition, at 8 o'clock.

Coach G. Harris (Doc) White must fill two gaping vacancies caused by the graduation of Phil Fox and Billy Mitchell, but by midseason expects to have as fast a combination as gave Wilson a creditable year in 1935-6.

College Scores

Congress Heights Practice.

The Congress Heights football team will practice on its own field at 7 o'clock tonight in preparation for a game to be played against the Anacostia Eagles tomorrow at 2 p. m.

Pros on Edge For D.C. Fray Tomorrow

Americans, Eagles Will Offer Stars in Lineups in Title Struggle.

The Boston Shamrocks, 22 strong, arrived in Washington last night to apply the finishing touches to what they hope will be championship form for their America Pro football league title game against the New York Yankees at Griffith Stadium tomorrow.

Don Elser, fullback, and Red Fleming, former Catholic University star, head the Shamrock lineup.

Elser, a Gary, Indiana boy, graduated from Notre Dame last year. He served as a fullback with the Irish and was all-American in 1935. An all-around athlete, Elser tried out for the Olympics, but failed to qualify by a narrow margin.

Elser is a triple threat man. The fastest man on the team, indeed one of the fastest men in pro football, Elser bears the brunt of most of the Shamrocks' running plays. He is an adept passer and a powerful kicker.

Fleming From C. U.

Fleming served on the Cardinal grid team during his four years at Catholic University, but was chiefly distinguished as a boxer in the heavyweight division. Fleming's specialty on the Cardinal boxing team was knocking out highly-touted opposition with monotonous regularity.

Don Elser's brother, Earl, holds down a tackle berth with the Shamrocks. A graduate of Butler, Earle Elser was a great basketball player as well as football performer during his collegiate days.

Harold Nunn, Cornell; James Zintell, Holy Cross; Earl Seick, Manhattan; Swede Ellstrom, Oklahoma, and Pat Swan, Wake Forest, are other members of the Boston squad.

The game is called for 2 p. m.

Tickets are scaled at $1.10 and $1.65. All college and high school students presenting their school athletic tickets will be admitted for half-price, plus Federal tax.

Tickets are on sale at Griffith Stadium.

Southern Editors Slighted by Choice recognized as the national champion."

Zipp Newman, sports editor of the Birmingham (Ala.) News, said the Southeastern Conference "should be anxious to co-operate with the Sugar Bowl committee after the way Washington snubbed the conference's leading football teams. With a seating capacity of 75,000, the Sugar Bowl would attract as much attention as any other bowl game in the country."

"The South had the idea they liked tough teams to beat," Newman added, "if ever a team's record justified an invitation it was Louisiana State's record."

Other comment follows:

Ed Danforth, Atlanta Georgian—"Just a couple of soiled doves of football playing in the Rose Bowl for the consolation prize—that is the prospect since Washington selected Pittsburgh. All semblance of a national championship angle has been wiped away."

Blinkey Horn, Nashville Tennessean—"From this distant angle it (selection of Pittsburgh) seems about as logical to have picked Pirates and Tigers to play in the last World Series instead of taking on the Giants and Yankees.

"Maybe they merely want a football team on the Coast they think they can trounce. Certainly they have proved they do not crave the Nation's best eleven."

Morgan Blake, Atlanta Journal—"The Huskies made a smart choice. They will fill the stadium with Pitt and also win the game. They knew they couldn't beat L. S. U. and they knew that Alabama was always poison in Rose Bowl competition."

at Pasadena, Pitt has consistently done the grandest el foldo. * * *

George T. Davis, in the Evening Herald and Express News story of the announcement of Pittsburgh, wrote:

"'Is it true what they say about Dixie?'

"Evidently that is something that Ray Eckmann and his Washington associates never have heard.

"At least they never heard of the logic of picking an unbeaten Southern team over an Eastern foe that has tasted of defeat and likewise was tied in the same season.

"Thus, within the shadows of Pasadena's 'suicide bridge' the hopes of the Pacific Coast to regain some gridiron prestige at the expense of an unbeaten foe will be crushed on New Year's Day."

Southeastern U. Opens Season at Baltimore

Southeastern University opens its most difficult basketball schedule tonight when it meets Baltimore University in Baltimore. The Southeastern schedule, released yesterday, includes two games with Gallaudet College, thereby marking the first time Southeastern has entered into competition with other college teams of this section.

Coach Bernie Phillips has had his squad working out for some time on the Central Y. M. C. A. court. He will probably start the following five against Baltimore: Madden and Woodward, forwards; Beihel, center; Bill Albert and Dickey, guards.

In the following schedule, all home games will be played at the "Y."

*December 5, Baltimore University; *12, Mt. St. Marys' College; 19, Shepherd State Teachers' College; 22, Columbia University, College of Pharmacy, N. Y.

ABA President Warns Against Perils of Boom

Smith Sees Beginning of Era of Economic Expansion.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 4.—Tom K. Smith, president of the American Bankers Association, said today that there were many indications that a period of economic expansion is starting, and warned against another "boom."

"A boom presents problems as complex and as serious as those of a depression," he said in an address before the Association of Life Insurance Presidents, assembled in annual meeting.

"In periods of inflated prosperity the average American becomes a gambler and is no longer satisfied with insurance or conservative saving habits as a means of attaining financial security."

Smith, who is president of the Boatmen's National Bank, St. Louis, continued that in such a period the average American "thinks of himself as a Napoleon of finance, and by assuming unsound risks he hopes to acquire great wealth quickly. On the other hand, on the onset of the panic which results from the boom, he loses faith and he demands cash on his life insurance policy and cash from his savings account."

Laws and Speculation.

He pointed out the country now has economic safeguards which did not exist in previous years, but warned that their value could not yet be accurately foretold, adding, "you cannot prevent unsound speculation by passing laws."

Smith said Government lending agencies should now relinquish such of their work as can be handled by private enterprise, and that officials of agencies had stated repeatedly they were willing to step aside as soon as private enterprise would step in.

Guy W. Cox, president of John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Boston, told the convention life insurance investments are "unimpaired, ample and safe."

His report contained results of a survey of portfolios extending back 30 years, including the recent depression period, he said. The survey was based on aggregate investment data of 49 companies with assets representing about 92 per cent of the total assets of all United States legal reserve life companies.

The report revealed that about half of the assets of the companies at present are invested in bonds, both Government and corporate; about one-fifth are invested in farm and urban real estate mortgages, and the remainder in policy loans, real estate and miscellaneous assets.

Wheat Slumps After Setting New Top Prices

December Sells at $1.26⅜ but Closes 2 Cents Lower.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 4.—Weakness developed in wheat prices late today largely because of prospects of wheat shipments to Chicago from other domestic markets.

Tumbles of 2 cents a bushel from the day's top values for wheat were witnessed, a contributroy unsettling factor being that this was the ninth successive day of new high-price records, notably Chicago December wheat at $1.26⅜.

Chicago wheat futures closed unsettled at the same as yesterday's finish to ⅝ lower, December 124¾@⅞, May 120⅝@⅞, July 107¾, corn unchanged to ⅜ higher, December 107⅝@¾, May new 102¾@¾, July new 98½, oats ⅛@½ advanced, May 46⅛, and rye ¼ off to ¼ up, May 95½. The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Speculation Turns to Oils; Bond Tone Improves; Sterling Affected by Royal Plans.

New York, Dec. 4.—Bonds hardened without much increase in trading. Prices were higher for most stocks, with a shift in activity. Leading commodity shares rose 1 to 3 points. Most stock groups were little changed or irregular. Sales volume held around 2,250,000 shares. Dollars stiffened. December wheat closed down half a cent at 124⅛ cents a bushel.

Securities markets continued to grope their way through the haze cast over trading by the hullabaloo made by the King of England's little affair and the uneasiness over what next may be done by the Federal Reserve, the SEC, or both to curb the speculative boom that those authorities seem to think is about to develop. Mere reference to the possibility of a boom by high Government officials would up to a short time ago have given the stock market a fillip, but now the general view doubtless is that business is in a strong recovery movement and the possibility of inflation breaking out is apparent.

Government authorities may be right in beginning now to take steps to curb what they will have been partly responsible for bringing about—namely, not so much an appreciation in stocks to correspond to business improvement (the actual stage) but speculation based on the inflationary forces set in motion by the dollar's devaluation and the financing of huge Government deficits by bank credit. Just how far they are likely to go at this stage, or just when they will start is a matter of guesswork.

Snapping the Whip.

It will be interesting to see how much taming the stock market can take without business itself suffering. For all the big dividend payments and large percentage gains for earnings, actual business is still far from reaching the former prosperity levels. Between the stock market guardian and the tax gatherer, the fellow looking for profits may lose some of his habitual interest in enterprise of any legitimate sort

Credit in use has expanded a little in the past week, according to the Federal Reserve statement, a usual seasonal affair. Currency rose sharply at the first of the month, which brought down excess reserves, but another large addition to the monetary gold stock was reported. The $26,000,000 came in a week with small imports, suggesting a further sale of metal held by the stablization fund to the Treasury, gold gained through sale of dollars, either to capital on the way back to Europe or as a result of operations designed to hold down the value of the dollar. Miscellaneous and commercial loans here rose a little.

Foreign exchanges today were nervous, particularly sterling, which is reflecting concern all over the sterling monetary area with regard to a possible change in British rulers. After dipping under $4.90 the pound recovered. The affair Simpson also affected the London money market. Three months bill rates advanced to the highest in a long time, seven-eighths of 1 per cent.

Could Raise Hob.

Another hint of coming events was given the stock market by the SEC director, Landis. Commissioner Landis told investment bankers at their convention down South that "the intensity of our present sellers' market is in danger of bringing about a subtle dulling of responsibility. We cannot accept the conception of the place of speculation in our security markets that built a justification for the prices of the late twenties. Pure speculation we can tolerate at the race track or elsewhere, where it cannot stalk under the enticing garb of investment."

That, particularly the closing sentence, might be anything or nothing. Some Wall Street men wondered if Mr. Landis intends to draw a line between what he considers speculation that is tainted with investment and that which is purely stock gambling, and, if so, what method he will use. If such a line be drawn, the inference is that measures will be taken to stop activity in the second category. Conceivably nearly all trading on margin, and virtually all buying and selling for short term, would fall under the displeasure of the SEC.

Stock for Officers.

One of the Loew's stockholders has some negative ideas on the proposal to grant an option on stock to the president at a price substantially under the current market. The stockholder, Frank A. Harden, informed the company that "it is my opinion that the unissued common stock of the company belongs to the common stockholders, and if any of this unissued stock is to be issued, it should be issued on a pro rata share basis to all stockholders. I further believe that no individual even though he be the president of the company should be given an opportunity to buy up a large block of stock from the company treasury at a large discount from the open market price. I believe that Mr. Schenck should be compensated for his services in the form of a straight salary, nothing more. That salary should be based upon the value of his services to the company as determined by the board of directors."

Compensation.

Since Loew's is asking stockholders to approve the proposal, the free expression of opinion is in order. Perhaps it is beside the point that the late Irving Thalberg would have been able to take down the same amount of stock, so that the new option to Mr. Schenck represents no fresh dilution of the equity of other stockholders. The argument over the use of stock in executive compensation plans is extensive on both sides. One of the chief points against it is that it makes executives stock market minded, and before the securities exchange act there were plenty of corporate officials who spent more time manipulating than managing. The main argument for a stock plan is that it furnishes maximum incentive at minimum cost to other stockholders, whose consent generally is asked even if they have no pre-emptive rights.

Boardroom Sweepings.

Large stockholders in companies which have fiscal years ending in January, February or March are in luck. Those companies will for the most part wait until after this calendar year before paying out surplus in extras and specials, so that the individual recipients will not have to worry about income taxes on them until 1938. By that time no telling what may happen . . . The letter of December 2 to stockholders of Union Bag & Paper reporting the decision of directors on November 27 to build a third unit at Savannah would excuse some of the exuberance in the stock. The president said that the company is so far behind orders due to shortage of paper that it has had to confine operations to the bag factories, and predicted large savings from the new plant . . . Republic Steel again is mentioned in the merger column, but in good quarters no confirmation can be had.

In the Western districts alone loading of live stock for the week ended November 28 totaled 12,412 cars, a decrease of 2,960 cars below the preceding week this year but an increase of 2,559 cars above the same week in 1935.

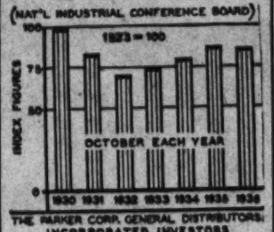
Retail Food Prices Decline 1½ Per Cent



Boston, Mass., Dec. 4.—The retail prices of food declined 1½ per cent from September to October. The usual seasonal trend is upward. On the other hand, food prices in October were still 38½ per cent from the depression low in 1933 although they were still 23 per cent below prices in October, 1929.

Public Nat. Bank Plans Stock Issue

To Increase and Equalize Capital and Surplus.

New York, Dec. 4.—Plans for increasing to $7,000,000 each the capital and surplus of the Public National Bank & Trust Co., from the present $5,775,000 capital and $6,225,000 surplus were made public today by E. Chester Gersten, president. The procedure proposed is to issue a 20 per cent stock dividend and to sell 4,000 shares of the bank's stock at auction.

The purpose of the change, which is subject to the approval of stockholders and the Comptroller of the Treasury, is for convenience in complying with the new banking act, which provides that a national bank, before declaring dividends must transfer part of its earnings to surplus until surplus equals capital. If the plan becomes effective, the bank will have capital funds of about $15,200,000 including estimated undivided profits of about $1,200,000.

$100,000,000 Bills Offered by Treasury

The Secretary of the Treasury gives notice that tenders are invited for two series of Treasury bills to the aggregate amount of $100,000,000 or thereabouts. One series will be 91-day bills and the other series will be 273-day bills. Both series will be sold on a discount basis to the highest bidders.

Tenders will be received at the Federal Reserve banks or branches up to 2 p. m., on Monday. Tenders will not be received at the Treasury Department.

Bituminous Production.

The National Coal Association estimates bituminous coal production in the United States for the week ended November 28 as approximately 9,350,000 net tons. Production for the corresponding week: 1935, 7,498,000 tons; 1934, 6,343,000 tons.

Manufacturing Output Climbs To 1929 Level

But Per Capita Production Is Still 19% Under Peak Year.

New York, Dec. 4.—While actual output in various manufacturing industries has reached or even surpassed the 1929 level, per capita production in general is still approximately 19 per cent below the per capita output of 1929, according to a study comparing per capita production in 1929, 1933 and 1936, which has just been made public by the National Industrial Conference Board.

Comparisons of production figures for the present year with those of 1929, the conference board points out, do not show accurately the shortage that must be made up before 1929 standards are reached, unless the growth of population is taken into account. To provide the same amount of goods per capita today as were made available by industry in 1929, total output must exceed that of 1929.

Of 18 industries studied by the conference board, only four had a greater output per capita of population in the first nine months of 1936 than in 1929. On a per capita basis production in the plate glass industry in this period stood at 130.8 per cent of the 1929 level; in the tobacco products industry at 106.2 per cent; in the boot and shoe industry at 106.1 per cent, and in the petroleum refining industry at 100.4 per cent.

Industries in which per capita production this year has been between 80 per cent and 90 per cent of the 1929 level included textiles, slaughtering and meat packing, sugar melting and flour milling. Per capita output in the automobile industry this year was 78 per cent of the 1929 volume. Other industries in which the per capita output ranged between 75 per cent and 80 per cent of the 1929 level are rubber tires and tubes, iron and steel, zinc, coke and tin.

Stolen Car Found Riddled by Bullets

Lieut. John Fowler, police ballistics expert, last night was examining three slugs taken from a bullet-riddled car found yesterday at Twenty-eighth and McGill Terrace northwest.

The machine, owned by Luther J. Tucker, 6615 Georgia avenue northwest, was reported stolen from the 2200 block of Connecticut avenue Thursday night. It was punctured eight times by bullets, one directly in front of the steering wheel.

Denver Unit Gives $150 For Tuberculosis Fight

The gift of $150 to the Christmas Seals fund of the D. C. Tuberculosis Association was voted unanimously yesterday by the executive council of the Washington Ladies Auxiliary of the Jewish Consumptive Relief Society, of Denver. Notice of this action came to Mrs. Ernest R. Grant, managing director of the Tuberculosis Association, in a letter from Mrs. Joseph Millenson, president of the society.

"We feel that in giving this aid to the Washington campaign for the prevention of tuberculosis," said Mrs. Williamson last evening, at her home, 1824 Belmont road, "we are in reality furthering the objectives of our own society. For in so doing we lessen by just so much the probability of more patients being taken from this city for the care of the Denver society. And we are fully aware of the splendid preventive services carried on here by the local association with the funds raised from the annual sale of Christmas Seals."

CHAPTER 26.

Becky wakened early to the sound of rain, spattering against the window pane, streaming in torrents down the drain pipes, an auspicous symbol for the beginning of an undertaking, but nothing could daunt her now that she had made up her mind. She took her shower and dressed in clothes suitable for the day. Soft warm wool in wine red which made her olive skin faintly lustrous and brought out the sea green light in her big eyes.

"You're not going to look for a position today, Becky?" her mother/er inquired.

She answered cheerfully, "I shouldn't be needing it much if I let the rain keep me at home."

A camel's hair coat was belted about her waist. A vagabond felt tipped above the eyebrows, which looked more than ever as if they had been painted on.

To See Philip.

"She is as pretty as a picture," her mother thought, waving to her from the window.

She would not have watched so calmly if she had known what was in her daughter's mind.

Almost an hour later, Becky was plodding up Telegraph Hill. She could not see the flowers from the street but she could imagine them beaten and washed by the rain. She stood at the top of the steps for a moment to catch her breath.

Supposing Philip shouldn't be at home! Oh, but he would! He always worked in the mornings. Her finger was on the bell before she noticed that the card beside it did not bear his name. There must be some mistake, she thought, looking again. But Philip's name did not appear on any of them.

Reluctantly, she rang the manager's bell. She didn't like the woman, but how else was she to learn the reason?

The hatchet-faced blonde did not remember her until she asked for Philip. Then she smiled knowingly as she replied, "He isn't here. He's never lived here."

"He hasn't?" gasped Becky.

"He sublet it," the manager explained. Her hard face softened as she added, "I was sorry about your bad luck. I hope you don't blame me for what happened. I knew I'd heard the name somewhere and naturally when I saw her again I mentioned it."

'It's all right," Becky assured her, not wanting to discuss it. "I wonder if you can tell me where Mr. Rhodes is living now?"

"He had his books sent there when these other people moved in,' the woman said. "If you'll wait a minute I'll see if I still have it."

His Address.

Becky stepped inside to wait. The apartment was gaudily overfurnished. Chairs upholstered in rose-colored velour, gilt-tasseled, rose-colored lamps and sofa cushions, plants of every description, hand painted pictures and photographs, no books but shelves crowded with small China animals. Fat Chinese gods jostling smirking-faced dolls, vases of artificial flowers, dusty and faded, goldfish darting about a murky bowl and a canary singing its head off in a gilded cage.

The lady had a taste for knick-knacks and Becky could easily picture her friend Nelcine Jackson in similar surroundings. It made her heart ache but it did not deter her. When the woman returned from her bedroom with Philip's address copied on a scrap of paper Becky crammed it in her pocketbook saying, "Thank you very much."

The blonde wanted to discuss it.

"I suppose you've heard . . ." she began, but Becky gave her no chance to finish it. Before she could say any more Becky had hurried away.

Their apartment was rented to some one else. The darling kitchen with its gallant little copper kettle singing for another woman! She had pictured Philip living alone while all this time he hadn't been there. He had moved too late to have his name in the telephone directory. His uncle had asked her to call him at the number he had given her.

Doubts.

Glancing at the address in her bag she saw that it was on Geary street. Not a very desirable neighborhood, either. What did Philip mean? Suddenly as she looked at it she remembered that Philip had told her he had rented a small apartment for Nelcine Jackson on Geary street. He couldn't have decided to live there with her? Or could he? Wasn't the mood he was in now just as dangerous as that when he had married her? Oh, but she had been different then. Philip, too, had been different. He wouldn't do a thing like that now.

She was in the entrance facing a row of dirty cards. Third from the top said, "Mr. Philip Rhodes." Should she go in and see for herself or admit she was defeated and creep away? Philip would never know what a fool she had made of herself. It wasn't too late.
